City committee to go to Austin

Negotiations proceed with Mission Cable

Final negotiations in the re-franchise agreement between the City of Spearman and Mission Cable Company have been scheduled for Feb. 20 - 21 in Austin, Tx. Spearman's negotiating team will fly to Austin at that time.

This was the outcome of Thursday's meeting in Austin between Jack Hopper, PhD., whom Spearman appointed to prepare the new franchise ordinance, and Jack Morgan, Mission Cable's chief executive officer. Spearman's negotiating team for this project is comprised of Mayor Bob Pearson, Mayor Pro-Tem Burl Buchanan, Alderman Mike Cudd, and City Manager Jim Murray.

City Manager Jim Murray told the Spearman Reporter that yesterday's meeting in Austin resulted in several agreements on franchise contract items, but that other items are still being negotiated. He anticipates that the Austin meeting later this month could finalize the agreement. This agreement would then be brought before the City Council at its regular session on Tuesday, Feb. 28 for approval, disapproval, or tabling for further study.

"My highest priority with franchising Mission Cable is that we proceed in an expeditious manner and it come to a close as quickly as possible," said Mayor Bob Pearson. "The most important reason for regulations is to establish certain standards which are to be Spearman Cable Manager Terry Porter, representing the views of its owner, who lives in Fresno, Calif., commented, "These negotiations would not be so drawn out if Spearman didn't have 18 pages of demands in its franchise proposal." Porter said he has been present at other Panhandle towns' cable franchise negotiations and found them to be more easily and rapidly accomplished than Spearman's have been.

Pearson said in defense of the proposed contract, "Spearman did not have any powers in the franchise ordinance that enabled it to check into complaints in the past. If the franchising process will ensure that our citizens have a good quality signal, governmental access capabilities and expansion of service capabilities, then that process is a necessary one."

Both men agree that the sale of Spearman Cable's franchise to Mission Cable is desirable for all concerned, from townspeople to Spearman Cable's employees.

Murray explained to the Spearman Reporter that cities have no control over what channels a cable company puts on locally or on the cable company's rates. This is because laws under the Federal Communications Act have disallowed this. Most cable systems were freed from municipal rate regulation two years ago.

"The cable companies everywhere are charging what the local market will bear," Murray said.
"Our citizens' main concern about the transfer to Mission is how much their rate will go up and the quality of the signal. They also want to know how many and which channels will be available. Mission has the right to decide these things, but their owner has promised to be sensitive to our needs and values here in Spearman."

Mission owner O'Neal promised at the public meeting in December to increase Spearman's capacity to 35 channels when/if his company has the new franchise. This is one of the items under negotiation in the proposed re-franchise agreement.

When asked what could happen if Mission and the City of Spearman do not come to an agreement and the sale does not go through, Porter said, "Spearman Cable was automatically renewed by the City Council in 1985 and that agreement is good through 1995. Even if Spearman Cable keeps the franchise, channels will be added. We have a 21-channel capacity here now. What would be changed is the time frame. Mission would have already put three new channels on by now if the agreement were in effect."

Operation costs cause radio program's demise

The teen radio program, "Weekend Wipeout," which Gary Ellsworth hosted as disc jockey on Radio Station KRDF for over two years, was taken off the air at the end of November last year.

The Hansford Plainsman recently investigated the reasons for "Weekend Wipeout" 's removal from KRDF's programming. Station manager and co-owner George Young explained that cost factors were the only reasons for the program's demise.

"I took a long hard look at the program after having it on the air for six months," said George. "I knew then that it was losing money. I knew before then, but I took a harder look at it after six months." He further explained that he kept the show on the air for four additional months but "couldn't find a way to make it work."

The costs involved for the program included employee wages, employer-paid insurance, and purchasing of records. KRDF has a country-western format and the "Weekend Wipeout" show was rock music, so the records had to be purchased for it. "For the amount we used of this type of music, we couldn't get a regular supply service. This meant we had to pay retail prices for these records," Young commented.

Young emphasized that there were no listener comptaints about the program and he himself was pleased with Gary Ellsworth's performance. "I would have kept it on the air even if it had just broken even," Young said. "But I am a businessman and the main purpose of the radio station is to make money, first and foremost."

The Hansford Plainsman was prompted to make this inquiry by two local parents of teenagers. These parents said their teens miss the "Weekend Wipeout" program and there is some confusion about why it is no longer offered. The two parents also commented that the show "kept our kids at home on the weekend."

Lynxettes to play in Bi-district championships

Next Thursday night, Feb. 16, the Spearman varsity Lynxettes will play in the bi-district game for 1-2A. They will play against Canadian or Stratford, depending upon who won the Friday night, Feb. 11 game between Stratford and Canadian. (results unavailable at presstime)

If Canadian won, the girls will play Canadian at Perryton. If Stratford won, another game would be played for playoffs between Stratford and Canadian. If Stratford won that playoff game, the Lynxettes would play Stratford at Pampa next Thursday night.

Ringing phones call reporters to action

The telephone rings all day long in the Hansford Plainsman's office. It's a wonder sometimes that Marlene Davis, the bookkeeper/receptionist, can find a spare moment to add two and two together because of all the time she spends fielding phone calls. There are a dozen times a day she hangs up the receiver only to have the telephone ring again before she can pick up a pencil.

People call to take out or renew subscriptions, which always makes us happy. People call to place ads, which make us absolutely ecstatic. A few people call to make a complaint, which, while not sending us into handsprings of joy, we are nevertheless anxious to address and redress, if necessary.

Most importantly, in many ways, people also call to ask questions. This can prove to be the most satisfying call of all, because it reminds us of our main function, which is to keep the public in-s formed. These callers send us scurrying to check times and dates of events, or to begin investigations into rumors, controversies, or problems.

Not all of the work we do to respond to these calls turns into an article published in an edition of our newspaper. Some of the rumors go up in a puff of smoke when we start looking for facts, for example. Other story projects do not work out for lack of newsworthiness or inadequate interest on the part of those involved. In spite of these "deadends," we are eager to pursue all the leads our readers give us.

This is how some of our best stories begin: Marlene picks up the jangling phone and says in her cheery voice, "Spearman Reporter. How can I help you?" and the voice

A PHARMACIST DISCUSSES OVER-THE-COUNTER MEDICATIONS

EDITOR'S NOTE: The Hansford Health Shelf is published two to four times per month in the Hansford Plainsman and the Gruver Statesman. Readers are invited to submit general information questions to the newspapers on health-related topics, such as dentistry, nutrition, and physical fitness. Each question will be answered in this column by a Hansford County health pro-

Questions may be submitted in writing to The Hansford Plainsman Gruver Statesman, c/o Box 458, Spearman, Texas 79081. Writers' names will be printed unless otherwise indicated.

QUESTION: What are over-thecounter medicines?

ANSWER: An over-the-counter medicine is one which you can buy without a prescription, a medical doctor's drug and dosage order. The Federal Drug Administration (FDA) determines what can and cannot be sold without a prescription. The basis for making a drug available by prescription only is primarily safety. For example, any medicine with codeine in it in the state of Texas cannot be obtained without a prescription due to codeine's dangerously addictive properties. Some prescription drugs become available over-thecounter after a time. Examples of these are Bendryl 25mg and Ibuprofen 200mg. Some antihistimine preparations are being released from their prescription-only status to over-the-counter availability. In these cases, the drug's safety has been demonstrated and sometimes its strength has been reduced for over-the-counter sale.

QUESTION: What are some guidelines for specific uses of over-thecounter drugs?

ANSWER: The over-the-counter drugs can be divided into several groups, based on the medical symptoms they treat.

For coughs of a simple, nonproductive nature, expectorant preparations are recommended, such as Robitussin or Guaifenesin. The cough reflex is a necessary one, so you don't want to "quiet" it entirely. A.H. Robbins Co. has a formula called Robitussin DM which acts as an expectorant and yet soothes a cough at the same

For sinus and allergy problems, antihistimines are helpful. Benedryl is commonly used to help dry runny noses in children. It also acts as a mild sleep-inducer. (a side effect) There are some ineffective sinus preparations on the market, so talk to your pharmacist or doctor before buying one!

Some antihistimine preparations, with other added ingredients, have some unfortunate side effects, such as raising the blood pressure, so a person who is already being treated for blood pressure problems should always consult a doctor, or pharmacist before taking sinus medications.

Some sinus medications contain phenylpropanolamine, a chemical also used in appetite suppressants. I don't encourage the use of sinus products containing this chemical because it causes stimulation of the Central Nervous System and in

For pain of a general nature, over-the-counter drugs include the ibuprophens, such as Mediprin, Advil, Nuprin, etc (brand names), the acetominophens, such as Tylenol, and aspirin. Ibuprofen is now available in 200 milligram pills without a prescription. It is easier on the stomach than aspirin. For a headache, Extra-Strength Tylenol in caplet form is what I recommend for adults.

Tylenol and Panadol are the pain relivers most used for children, because aspirin should not be given to them. Children treated with aspirin for fever have an increased risk of developing Reye's Syndrome, which is a disease causing inflammation of the liver following a viral infection. Reye's Syndrome can be fatal without medical care.

A new use for low-dose or "baby" aspirin has developed in recent years. Adults are taking it not for pain but for their hearts. Aspirin has been shown to reduce the risk of myocardical infarction (heart attack) and stroke in those at risk for stroke.

treated by a physician. Pharmacists are now limited to selling over-the-counter products which soften ear wax, such as Debrox and ERO. Years ago, we could sell pain relievers for the ear without a prescription. Preperations containing Antipyrine and Benzocaine ignore the problem causing it instead of getting the problem taken care of professionally. This often led to complications of the original problem.

For excessive stomach acid, there are many kinds of nonprescription antacids. I think it is a good idea for people to stay away from those containing aluminum, because the body stores aluminum instead of getting rid of it. The aluminum compounds in some of these products acts as an absorber and neutralizer of acid, but there are others which are equally effective which do not contain

Beginning Feb. 8, this $29 one-way fare is the lowest unrestricted fare between Dallas and these six cities on all flights scheduled at 9 p.m. or later or before 6 a.m.

"Our 'Night Flight' fares are an extension of Southwest's traditional low-fare philosophy," noted Don Valentine, Southwest's vice president-marketing, "and our customers are the beneficiaries. Southwest continues to police air fares and look for ways that its travelers can take advantage of travel bargains during off-peak flights.'

While the "Night Flight" fares are totally unrestricted, reservations are suggested. The new "Night Flight" fares are available through travel agents or by calling Southwest Airlines directly.

"Night Flight" fares represent a savings of about 60 percent off the regular peak fares between Dallas and these cities.

From the outside, the latest competitive combine looks new and improved.

In fact, with its bigger, centered cab and engine in the back, it looks a lot like the combine we introduced over ten years

But look inside, and you'll see they left out the most important part: the rotary threshing and separating system.

The Case IH Axial Flow combine is designed to hold onto more of your crop than a conventional machine like theirs. Much more. Our patented multi-pass threshing and separating system sees to that. It moves your harvest from header to grain tank with unmatched efficiency. And minimal loss.

The Axial Flow system is easier on your crps, too, thanks to the simple, repetitive action of the Axial Flow ingle rotor. And that gets you top dollar for every bushel.

The Axial Flow combine. It's one more sining example of what happens when you engineer a machine from the ground up to deliver the best quality in harvesting equiment and, the highest possible return on investment.

So why invest in a combine that gres you some of the advantages of the Case IH Axial Flow-witout the most important one? See your Case IH dealer and take closer look at an Axial Flow combine soon.

THANK YOU

I am grateful for the cards, letters, prayers, and gifts that I received during my recent illness.

Times like these make a person appreciate anew the importance and love of family and friends. The employees of Hickerson's Jewelers did a great job of taking the reins so my family could be with me. I appreciate our customers continued support during this time.

Texas Panhandles is in deep trouble in western Kansas. The Kansas Wildlife Officials said the big bull is in poor body condition and appears to be suffering from severe parasite infestation.

The article further states that the animal was first observed in South Dakota, and since had traveled through Nebraska, Kansas, and the Oklahoma Panhandle into the Texas Panhandle (in the Spearman area) and was last seen in Oklahome near the Optima Wildlife Refuge.

However, the item continues, nobody knows where the moose came from. It could have migrated from Montana, Wyoming, Colorado or perhaps Minnesota. All those state have native moose populations.

Kansas officials said the animal may be returned to the Kirwin National Wildlife Refuge where it apparently prospered during the summer. The Kansas Wildlife Agency said when the moose returned to that state in November, its health had deteriorated. Veterinarians who recently observed the animal hope to capture it, nurse it back to health and release it in its natural habitat.

The Proud Father And His Two Sons by Chelsea Nollner

This is the whole life story of a proud father snake and his two sons, Avocado and Grass. The two sons of the father snake got lost from their father and they were in a big jungle. They could not find their father anywhere. Then they rode a bus and the two little sons came home and Grass, the littlest one, could not find his brother. "Oh I miss Avocado so much. Where is my brother? Poor Avocado, he is probably as scared as I am. I better go look for him." Then he found him, "Avocado!" "Grass! Yea! I missed you so much, thank you I'm so glad you found me! We better go look for Daddy." "Daddy, can we go in the lake with baby monster?" The monster baby attacked them in the water. "Help! We better hold our breath, I can't swim!" Daddy snake asked the mother monster if they were going to hurt them. "No, but my husband will." "Well we better stay clear of your husband!" "Exactly!" "Be nice to my two sons, I don't want you to hurt them, they are my only pride and friends!" "Oh! Avocado! save me l can't swim!" Avocado saved Grass's life. "Thank you so much, Im so glad you saved my life! Well we better be going now." They saw the Daddy monster's hat and knew he would hurt them, so they went in a cave to get away from him cause they were scared of him and the littlest snake, Grass, was too curious, he slithered out of the cave and started hissing at the daddy monster. "Grass! Grass! Oh my gosh! Here Avocado, I'll grab a hold of your tail and you go save Grass." "Oh Daddy, you've been such a good Daddy to help us, I'm so proud your such a good Daddy." They were so tired of slithering, so the daddy snake went out and found a horse wagon on top of the mountain and they rode home. And that was the whole life cycle of the

A Proud Experience by Regan Boxwell

One day, Jodi Katsapillass discovered that she had a knack for writing. She wrote stories and poems. She let her thoughts flow like water from a faucet. She was assigned to compose a paper for a writing contest. She thought about her topic, "A Proud Experience." At first, she decided to do a story about a girl that won a writing award. Later, Jodi decided against that idea. She wanted more. She wanted a story with more depth. She finally decided to write about Ronald Reagan and how proud he was when he became President of the United States of America. Also, about the struggle he underwent to achieve his goal.

When she turned in her paper she felt that she could win the contest. She felt that all of the research had paid off. When the results were posted on the bulletin boards, she looked at the paper. She had won first place! Jodi recieved a medal in the auditorium in front of the whole school. She was known for this the rest of her school years. This was a proud experience for Jodi Katsapillass.

A Proud Icspereince by Janna Brock

One of my proudest icspereinces is riding my four wheeler. When I am at my familys barn. That is when we ride it. Sometimes when we are trying to start it it yousely won't start. It is worth waiting for grandpa to get the badirey to start working because then we have so much fun. He yousely gets it started then we all jump on. I am always the one to get to drive first. When I start driving I see lots of things. I see things like dirt hills and dusty paths. When we were riding it on Sunday we went all around the barn area. After that we rode through dusty roads and we rode to the airport. Soon we were going back to the barn and got in the pick-up and went home. I can't wait till I ride the four-wheeler again!

My Proud Experience-A Pilgrim Ancestor dictated by Kathryn Murphy

I am glad to be in America and be free. I have a Pilgrim ancestor, named Peter Brown and I am happy because he wanted to be free to make his own choices and to worship the way he wanted.

Not everyone has a Pilgrim ancestor. They were special because they were the first ones to be free. He was brave for going on the Mayflower.

I am glad to be in America and the reason I'm here is because of my ancestor, Peter Brown.

Carrying the Flag on Veteran's Day by Tom B. Kirk

On Veteran's Day I carried the flag. I was nervous, proud, and excited.

I wore my Scout uniform to the gym. Stand up straight, Listen to the band, and sing the "Star Spangled Banner."

I hold the flag high in the air. Walk steady, cross in front, put the flag in the stand.

A Boy Scout tells us to go.

Stand at attention, Salute, Pledge Listen to the ceremony.

We folded the flag. I shook the speakers hand. Proudly, I went back to class.
