PRICE SEVEN CENTS

TRAIL DUST

By DOUGLAS MEADOR

Many sails are fault with the winds of a fair destiny, on boats that never will leave the harbor, because they are held by anchors of envy.

A favorite cocktail is a drink palatable enough to swallow, and potent enough to advance the courage to ask for another.

Science is able to make cream without the services of a cow, and hard without any discomfort to hogs. It is believed that machines are thinking about replacing people as soon as they can perfect the factor of stupidity.

It had to happen, even in this country where cowboys once took pride in the jangling of their spurs, when they rode and walked. Somewhere the pattern of life must write the last line and close the book. It has happened. The booted rider climbed out of his pickup, wearing spurs, mated spurs. The rowels were set down with rubber bands.

The matted wig of memory is not easy to brush without a little lilac tonic to release the bars of moments that want to be forgotten.

Don't expect television to become a universal automotive accessory like the radio. The car makers know that only because people are home watching television, is there room for the rest of the population to drive.

The man who would choose between friends and money, actually has no choice. He does not have friends.

After the middle years, life seems to have slipped into the passing gear.

It is probable that others from the county are serving in the Viet Nam theatre, but the list is as complete as could be obtained. Previously the Tribune had planned to run pictures of the servicemen in Viet Nam in the Homecoming issue, but failed to obtain all photos needed for engravings.

Firemen Get Unanimous Approval In Appeal To Finance Equipment

MATADOR'S Volunteer Fire Department has friends. Last week the Tribune announced a plan by the department to finance the replacement of worn out and antiquated equipment. The firemen who work without pay did not ask for much. They had estimated the 25c per month from each of the more than 400 water users in the community, would be adequate for their need. This would amount to $3 per year or less than 1c per day.

The response was unanimous. Many homes and city property owners offered to contribute as much as $10, but Fire Chief Bill Jameson said the department would prefer 25c per month from each water user.

"In that manner," he said, "we could plan our future replacement purchases and be certain that any obligation we make will be retired from the steady resource. We are not in immediate need but we want to replace some of the older equipment and buy some newer items. If the water users respond with allowing 25c being added to their water bills, it will provide us with something over $100 per month, which will be adequate for our needs. We deeply appreciate the attitude of Matador property owners."

Tommie W. Green Wins Scholarship

LUBBOCK—Tommie W. Green, Texas Tech freshman from Matador, has been awarded a Sears Roebuck Foundation Scholarship in the amount of $300.

Green is enrolled in pre-veterinary medicine in the School of Agriculture. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Green Jr., Matador.

He was one of 13 Tech students to receive one of the Foundation Scholarships designed to aid young men and women from rural areas.

CARDS TO BE MAILED

Chief Jameson said the original plan had been to make a house to house canvass, but at the regular meeting of the Fire Department Monday night, it had been decided to mail "pledge" cards to water users. He said a committee had been appointed and that special cards would be prepared, asking for the pledge of 25c per month to aid in maintaining the needs of the department. The 25c will be added to the monthly water bill. The cards will merely be a pledge to support the department to the extent of less than a penny a day.

COUNTY AGENT PALLMEYER SAYS:

Several have asked the cost of the prickly pear control on an acre basis. This ranged from a low of $1.50 to a high of $3.76 an acre. Evaluation as to which mixture gave the best control will not be made until next spring.

Several questions have arisen relative to the funds Congress appropriated for the screwworm control program. According to information received, the cost of treating screwworm outbreaks that occur in the United States where insects have been eradicated must continue to be eradicated by state and private sources. The expense of maintaining a barrier zone along the US-Mexico border to guard against reinfestation by fertile flies will be borne by the federal government.

The main concern of livestock owners in Texas is now detection, treatment and reporting of screwworm cases.

With deer season just around the corner, the following tips should be helpful to hunters.

When taking a deer carcass home, don't expose the meat to motor heat or exhaust gases. Wrap the meat loosely and transport it on top of the car, in the bed of a pickup or in the car trunk.

If you want to butcher the carcass, hang it by the hocks or hock tendons, split the carcass along the backbone with a meat saw or an ax. Cut between the last two ribs and through the backbone to quarter the carcass. Discard or use as pet food the badly mutilated portions.

Venison is a dry meat and can be improved by adding butter or margarine, suet or other fat when broiling, pan-broiling or roasting. Use dry heat for tender cuts and moist heat for less tender cuts.

Some cuts of venison and suggested uses are: The hind and fore shanks for soups, stews or ground for sausage, meat loaf and patties. The round is usually tender enough for steaks, but if less tender, use for Swiss steaks or grind for sausage, patties or meat loaf. Legs, if small, may be roasted in an uncovered pan without adding liquid. Loins of venison is used for sirloin and porterhouse steak or choice roasts. Shoulder or chuck should be cut into roast for pot roasting or ground. Flank and breast cuts contain considerable meat. Use them for soups, stews or grind for patties, meat loaf or sausage. The neck of the carcass should have the tendons removed. It can then be roasted, used as stew or ground.

A little extra feed to some of the cows during the poor feed season prior to calving and after calving should increase milk production. This will cost money, but 200 to 400 lbs. of feed at the right time may well get you back twice the return on calf weights.

Still another way is to use only performance tested bulls proven to be rapid gainers. These will produce rapid gaining calves.

Soil Conservation Stresses Need for Deferred Grazing

(Released by local office of Upper Pease Soil Conservation District)

In the ranching business the thing which is marketed is grass. Cattle are only the medium through which the grass is marketed, and the better the quality and quantity of grass, the more pounds of beef a rancher can market from the same acreage of rangeland.

One of the ways through which the quality and quantity of grass produced on rangeland can be improved is by deferred grazing.

Under continuous grazing as the grass plants are bit off and become shorter the roots will get shorter in direct proportion to the top of the plant. When this happens the top layer of the soil dries out, and the plant cannot get the moisture from lower levels which normally it could get.

The deferring of rangeland for three or four months every three or four years during the growing season will enable the grass plants to get their roots down to lower levels to where it keeps on producing even if the top part of the soil dries out.

The average life of a grass plant is from five to seven years, so as old grass plants die, there needs to be young seedlings to take their place. When rangeland is deferred, the older grass plants are permitted to make seed and the seed that has been produced from the last deferral are allowed to come up and get established.

Deferred grazing can best be accomplished by having three or four pastures of equal forage producing capacity, and defer one pasture a year while the others are in use. Although this is an ideal situation, any deferred grazing system can be worked out for a rancher to fit his operation.

For more information and help on this and other soil and water problems, contact your local Soil Conservation Service office.

IN APPRECIATION
I wish to take this means of expressing my gratitude for all the prayers, food, flowers, cards and visits. It means so much to be remembered by all you wonderful friends. I deeply appreciate all that has been done for me and my family during my recent hospitalization and since returning home. May God bless each of you.
Mrs. Lewis Bostick.
