TEN BILLION DOLLAR CRIME BILL ANNUALLY

U. S. Stands Forth As Most Lawless Nation of World. What To Do About It.

By H. W. SEHL.
CHICAGO, July 16.—The great orators who have been doing all the shouting at both Conventions could stand by the side of the road, and, for hour after hour, paint a word picture of this grand and glorious country, in such a way that you would think Heaven itself is right here on earth.

When you look at the other side of the ledger, however, you will see there is small room for such talk until we have wiped off of the slate certain things which absolutely must be eliminated.

Today, we stand accused of being the most lawless Nation of the world, and surely other countries have the right to point the finger of shame at us, when you realize that we are supporting a crime bill of over $10,000,000,000 annually—about two-thirds as much as our Nation's total debt, and almost as much as all other countries of the world owe us as a war debt.

Don't think for a minute that this terrific expense, this cost of crime, does not concern you because it certainly does. Every man, woman and child in this country, is being taxed, directly or indirectly, through some source or other, to pay this bill—there are 120,000,000 people in the United States, which means a little, literally one of us. Think of it! $80, for every American citizen just on account of the crime that is going on right in our very midst.

Can this go on indefinitely? Can a country, even as big as ours, put up with such conditions? Most decidedly not. All of this must be changed, and changed soon, or else we will find ourselves slipping fast, going backward, and the very foundation upon which our Republic has been built, will crumble and waste away, until a condition exists such as has never been known since the dawn of time.

How are we going to bring about this change? Shall we clean up in spots—a town, county or state, at a time, driving crime from one section to another? This is the usual procedure, but I'm afraid it won't work this trip.

DRIPPING GAS STARTS FIRE IN THE GUTTER

All of a sudden, Saturday afternoon, the peaceful street scene in front of the Connellee Theatre was changed into an almost movie-like activity, when an old touring car, which had quietly been dripping its gasoline contents into the gutter, for evidently a long time, suddenly burst into flames in front of the magazine shop, and presto, the gutter, which unnoticed had become a river of gasoline, was suddenly a river of fire, with high leaping flames.

Eight of these athletes will scamper on the gridiron this fall before the throngs that will flock to the stands they are helping to build. They are assisting in wrecking the old stands on the north side of the field and in making excavation and laying new foundations for the new stadium.

Terrell Man Is The Checker Champion Of This Great State

DALLAS, July 14.—After four days of skirmishing, in which 38 lesser lights were eliminated E. L. Witt and C. M. Peters got down to some real checkers in the state checker tournament at the Y. M. C. A.

It was a victory of brilliance over cold logic, for Mr. Peters, who is of Dallas, plays a slow, methodical game with his hat pulled down over his ears.

George Pipgras do the work. "Murderers' Row" do the work. George Pipgras is one pitcher who has continued to work his head off for the world's champions.

The youngster has not taken advantage of the Yankee's heavy hitting, but has been hearing down and turning in some first class pitching performances. Of course, there have been games this spring in which the fact that the world's champions were amassing a doze runs or so was a great help to Pipgras.

Pipgras is the tallest as well as the most effective of the New York pitchers, standing 6-01 1-2 and weighing 187 pounds. This height and weight tends to make his fast ball effective, but George depends more upon a fast curve and a deceptive change of pace to win his ball games.

While it was not entirely appreciated at the time, Pipgras was the chief factor in the clean sweep made by the Yankees in the world series of 1927.

The world's champions had won the first game at Pittsburgh by a margin of one run, poor fielding hampering the Pirates, who were, however, full of fight.

Here is what John B. Foster, editor of the official baseball guide, said about the game: "This game had its surprise, the greatest surprise up to that time. It was the high grade skill of Pipgras, the young New York pitcher who held complete mastery over

In the ensuing years it often seemed that the pupil was better than the master, for one won as often as the other. In their engagement Friday they played four games, each winning a game and tying two games, but since Witt had a total of six games won during the tournament as compared with five for Peters he was declared champion.

Many of the eliminated players were unable to quit the game they loved and insisted on keeping on playing just for the practice. So Witt is champion of all Texas.

Book Publishing House Begins With $600 Borrowed Capital, Now Has One of the Largest Printing Plants In World

The oldest American publishing house, founded in the first days of the American Republic, is today doing business as one of the largest book publishers in the world. This house publishes not only for its own denomination with an American membership of over 4,000,000 out for the general trade, proving by its 136 years of history that the printing of literature of a moral and religious nature can be made to pay.

annually from the three publishing centers of the Book Concern. Over 1,000,000,000 pages of Sunday School literature are turned out each year. All the Oxford Bibles bound in the United States are bound in its New York house on a contract with the Oxford University Press.

Tracts, pamphlets, weekly magazines, books—Many miles of print roll out of its presses. And all this intense publishing activity had its beginning in the humblest way, in 1789, just four months after George Washington had taken his first oath of office as president of the United States.

With Church Only Four Years Old. The Methodist Episcopal Church was itself but four years old, and could muster only 25 preachers for its annual conference roll. This small gathering of pioneer pastors, although exceedingly hard pressed for money to carry on ordinary church activities, decided that the church must go into the publishing business. The press was a necessary ally of the preacher, in their judgment.

Having made the decision on faith rather than funds, they proceeded to find means for financing the venture. The Rev. John Dickens, a member of their group, solved the problem.

"I have $600, the savings of my life's labors," he said. "I will lend it to the conference for the beginning of this work."

Since that day, the business has proved so successful that not only did it pay back the borrowed capital, but it has given away over $7,000,000 in contributions for retired ministers, besides piling up $8,000,000 in assets.

"Doesn't the financial success of the book concern give evidence that its ideals were right in the beginning?" commented Dr. O. Grant Markham, who related the story of its start. Dr. Markham is one of the three publishing agents who direct the business of the Book Concern.

Ideals of the founders as they are perpetuated today in the actual conduct of business were further defined by the Chicago representative of the concern.

"It carries out John Wesley's aim to promote Christian education," he said. "The Book Concern has kept constantly before its people helpful standards which should promote intelligence in the individual and in the group. It has emphasized the relation between intelligence and religion."

Extensive Program "It does not confine itself to sectarian publications, nor is it limited to books, although its name would so imply. The different editions of the Christian Advocate which it publishes have a combined circulation of 245,000, the largest in the field of the religious press in the United States. The concern seeks to carry out a program of education starting with the youngest child and leading to the oldest member of the family. Publications for children and young people, the classmate, the Target and the Postal, have a combined circulation of more than 1,282,000.

"The broadness of its scope is indicated in its advertising title, 'The House of Good Books.' Any manuscript that would be helpful in instilling the proper ideals of life is considered for publication. Books of travel, poetry, biography, history, and general literature are published, many of these under the inprint of the Abingdon Press. This imprint which is found in Bibles which it prints for many denominations to use. "For many years the Book Concern published fiction. It 'discovered' Gene Stratton Porter, whose nature stories were so popular. "Nonfiction can win readers on its own merits, the publishers find. It has at least one 'best seller' to its credit. In August, 1924, the Book Concern published the work of a missionary, E. Stanley Jones, under the title, 'The Christ of the Indian Road.' The book proved so popular that it went into numerous editions and now, having sold some 250,000 copies, is still being printed and sold. It stood repeatedly among the six most popular current books of the nonfiction class in public libraries of the United States.

Certain basic ideas of the conduct of the publishing business, also learned from the founder of Methodism, have contributed to the success of the largest church publishing house. John Wesley, so say his followers, was the first to grasp the possibilities of printing good books cheaply through large-scale production. He believed, too, that it was better to sell tracts, pamphlets and other reading matter at low cost than to give them away as of no value, on the reasoning that people will keep what they pay for.

An Anecdote A little anecdote which has attached itself to John Dickens, the thrifty churchman who lent the necessary funds to start the Concern, and who became its first publishers' agent, illustrates the practical policy of its founders.

The Rev. Mr. Dickens wore a tall hat. He found it a convenient place to keep a small stock of the pamphlets he published. Walking down the streets of Philadelphia, where he lived and worked, he frequently doffed his hat in courteous salute to acquaintances he passed. Holding the hat in his hand, his stock was revealed and so the story goes, he made many a sale on the spot.

Whether or not the story is based on fact, it is recorded that the Book Concern had hard selling in those early days, and not until 1824 did its financial success begin. Printing up to that time had been done by outside publishers on contract. At that time it purchased presses and began to make money.

New York, was virtually a synonym for its name, and it still keeps one of its main offices in New York City. Last fall, a new publishing plant was dedicated at Dobbs Ferry, N. Y. In contrast to its modest beginnings, the 1927 plant covers an area of 167,000 square feet. It is a collegiate Gothic building, standing on the bank of the Hudson, on ground that once was the site of a brewery. A fully equipped publishing plant in Cincinnati is also owned and run by the Methodist Book Concern. Here the Sunday School lesson periodicals and story papers, two editions of the Christian Advocate and certain foreign language publications are printed. The large Chicago building, although classed as a depository, holds presses which print two more editions of the Christian Advocate, besides other periodicals. A proposal to make the Chicago plant a main publishing house of equal rank with New York and Cincinnati is under discussion. Depositories are also located in Boston, Kansas City, San Francisco, Pittsburgh, Portland, Ore., and Detroit.—Christian Science Monitor.

Washington Letter

By RODNEY DUTCHER (NEA Service Writer)

WASHINGTON.—"War is probable—unless the two empires, through mutual sacrifice, seek to reconcile their many conflicting interests."

That's the report of an American correspondent covering the great international struggle for oil between Britain and the United States.

Ludwell Denny, one of the best informed writers in Washington, becomes the first American with an American viewpoint and complete awareness of American policy to produce a volume describing the fascinating, vital oil war which so threatens world peace and endangers so many of the major acts of foreign policy and yet nearly always keeps itself out of newspapers.

"We Fight for Oil" is the name of the book. Aside from the fact that it comes from outside of the sea, it is today the most valuable of contributions to the oil-war literature because it brings this constantly changing situation virtually to the present hour. Furthermore it is free from propaganda and traces the war's battles on all fronts—Russian, Colombian, Persian, Venezuelan, Rumanian, Mexican and all the others.

Denny's journalistic career has taken him into the European and Asiatic war zones and subsequently for three years as a correspondent in the State Department here, where he followed closely the concealed moves of this government to safeguard the United States' future against foreign monopoly of the world's oil reserves.

To anyone who hasn't followed the war as Denny has his well documented revelations are likely to be astounding.

Here's a summary: Britain, with the Royal Dutch Shell company under Sir Henri Deterding and its government-controlled Anglo-Persian company, is fighting with out government and our Standard Oil company for the world's reserves. A struggle for world mastery is developing as we threaten Britain's long commercial and naval supremacy.

The fight centers on raw materials, principally oil because our own reserves are being depleted and both our industrial and naval supremacy now depend on it. Naval men regard actual war as inevitable; history shows no two great rival empires which ever allowed themselves permanent peace.

Downing street saw first the wisdom of helping British companies grab the world oil and had perhaps most of it before our government woke up. But the continuing foreign policy of the Wilson, Harding and Coolidge administrations has included belligerent furtherance of the interests of our oil companies.

Today Standard and Royal Dutch are still fighting sometimes in public, for a lions share of Russia's great reserves. Our government fought its way into a share in the rich Mosul fields, but Britain apparently still seeks to edge us out.

The surface of American-Mexican relations is temporarily peaceful, but unless Mexico makes further concessions there probably will be more trouble. The most furious warfare is now in progress in Venezuela and Colombia.

Meanwhile, Britain's policy is one of conservation—keeping oil in the ground. Our companies, at home and abroad, seem to be moving and selling the oil as fast as they can get it out. One's conception of Standard Oil as a patriotic arm of national defence runs smack up against that, reminding one that the British government is officially and directly involved in the oil-grabbing business while ours is not. Ours, in fact, permits Royal Dutch to take 35 or 40 per cent of its production from American fields.

NEW INSULATING MATERIAL

Sphagnum moss, which grows abundantly in the Scandinavian lowlands, is now employed by Swedish builders as insulating material for houses.

Safety First

WASHINGTON, July 16.—With summer at hand and the old-fashioned "dog days" approaching, health authorities are warning vacationists and devotees of outdoor sports against the dangers of water-borne diseases. Whether you are just spending a day along the old creek bank, or touring the continent, say these scientists, you must be on your guard because careful investigation has shown that approximately 85 percent of the waters in streams and lakes of the United States is unfit to drink and wayside cisterns and wells also frequently are found to be contaminated.

In a warning to travelers, and particularly to vacationists, Dr. Lula Hunt Peters, a nationally known writer on health topics, calls attention to a report by scientists at Mellon Institute, who declare: "The chances of immunity from water-borne diseases are better if one drinks only highly carbonated beverages."

Dr. Peter says: "If you are in a place where there may be a doubtful or dangerous water supply, or if you are going to such a place this summer, take along some good grade of bottled carbonated soft drinks. In a series of studies of carbonated beverages which were bottled by reliable houses, it was found that these carbonated drinks were quite free from bacteria."

Health authorities, investigating the causes of typhoid and other diseases that can be communicated by water, point out that youngsters particularly often are tempted to drink from a stream or pool near the old swimming hole. This is very dangerous, they say, and can be guarded against by providing the children with bottled carbonated beverages before they are permitted to go forth for a day in the great outdoors.
