LEFORS CEMETERY GETS UPDATED

Photos by Jeanne Swires

Memorial Heights Cemetery in Lefors is getting a facelift. The Lefors Cemetery Committee has been diligent in cleaning up and updating the appearance of their cemetery. Money was donated by Pastor Ken Houston in memory of his mother for new fencing to line drive at the cemetery. Shown in pictures are Rick McMullen, Pat McBee, Ken Houston and Bob Kline as they set the posts for new fencing.

C.C. named No. 2 Community College in Texas

STAFF REPORT

A recent ranking by Schools.com lists Clarendon College as the No. 2 Community College in the state of Texas.

Sixty-six colleges were ranked and scored on a 10-point scale, using data including the percentage of students enrolled in distance education, student-to-faculty ratio, cost of attendance, graduation rate, the number of transfer to four-year public college in Texas, and flexibility.

“Obviously we are very excited and proud,” CC President Dr. Robert Riza said. “This just goes back to the hard work and dedication of our faculty and staff.”

The article praises the College’s online course offerings and low student-to-faculty ratio, which is one of the lowest in the state.

In addition, the College’s ranking by CNNMoney for best student success in Texas was also recognized.

Galveston College is ranked No. 1 on the top 10 list, with Lone Star, Collin County and Western Texas rounding out the Top 5 schools.

NOT QUITE THE BATCAVE

A local Pampa resident spotted this bat hanging out at the Hughes building early Thursday morning. Looks like he got a little tired on his way to his cave last night and found the closest awning to find shade under so he can sleep for the day.

AgriLife Research potato breeding field day set for July 30 near Springlake

SUBMITTED BY
TEXAS A&M AGRILIFE EXTENSION

SPRINGLAKE – The annual Potato Field Day in the High Plains featuring the Texas A&M University AgriLife Potato Breeding and Variety Development Program will be July 30.

The program is jointly hosted by Texas A&M AgriLife Research and cooperators

Bruce Barrett, owner of Barrett Farm.

Attendees should assemble at 10 a.m. at Springlake Potato Sales, located 12.5 miles north of Littlefield and 8.5 miles south of Springlake on State Highway 385, said Dr. Creighton Miller, AgriLife Research potato breeder in College Station.

Regional daycare training set Aug. 1 in Haskell

SUBMITTED BY

TEXAS A&M AGRILIFE EXTENSION

HASKELL – The Texas A&M AgriLife Extension Service in Haskell County will host a Haskell County – Regional Daycare Training Conference Aug. 1 at the Haskell Early Learning Center, 16 Ave. D. in Haskell.

“Any daycare employee, foster parent, early Head Start or Head Start teacher is encouraged to attend,” said DaLinda Black, AgriLife Extension family and consumer sciences agent for Haskell County.

The program will offer continuing education units for Texas state licensed, registered or listed daycares, as well as for Head Start, Early Head Start and foster parents. Attendees will have the choice of eight continuing education units and lunch or a First Aid certificate, one continuing education unit and lunch. The cost is $45.

Those planning to attend should call Black at 940-864-2546 for complete registration information.

CASA of the High Plains Pampa looking for new exec. director

STAFF REPORT

With the impending departure of current executive director Janet Watts to a different career field, CASA of the High Plains is in the market for someone to fill her position.

The executive director primarily has administrative and public relations responsibilities.

“They are responsible for community presentations and representing CASA in the public,” Watts said. “We get some grant funding so we have to administer them. We are a United Way agency and we have to participate in that process. Pretty much just doing the administrative oversight of the agency.”

Some of this also requires making sure all policies and procedures are in compliance and making sure the staff and volunteers have everything they need to serve children.

While the staff travels to see the children, the executive director only travels if a staff member can’t make a court appearance or if the executive director requires some training, which CASA pays for. The eight-county area is primarily serviced by the volunteers and staff members, however.

Being a non-profit, CASA of the High Plains is governed by a board of directors who oversees the executive director and the rest of the administration.

“We have an awesome board right now,” Watts said. “A very, very engaged board who is really bringing the agency up to a new level.”

member, Mac Smith, added that the board treats itself as a support structure. "As a board we are very blessed to have a staff and a volunteer base who are incredibly dedicated to the mission of CASA and to the goal of helping the kids in this area and helping the families of those children get through the situation they're in," Smith said.

There is a search committee set up with members of the board, community and people who have a connection to Pampa who has been tasked with reviewing applications and making a recommendation to the Board. The committee is looking for someone who is looking to take CASA of the High Plains to the next level. Those interested should have experience or a bachelor's degree in social work, psychology, education, business or non-profit administration. They should also have experience in public speaking, writing, grant writing, fundraising, public relations, volunteer management, child abuse and neglect. Watts and Smith agreed candidates will find an efficient staff already in place and that this is a great job. "You get to work with a great staff and a great group of volunteers to advance a goal that I can't imagine anybody saying is less than laudable," Smith said. "You get to help kids who need more help than anybody. You get to do it in a flexible environment." Watts added that the hours are very family-friendly. "Our philosophy is that we are dealing with families in crisis and kids who are feeling neglected," Watts said. "The last thing we want to ask our staff to do is neglect their own families. We are very, very much a family-first place of employment." For more information on CASA of the High Plains and about the job, visit www.casahp.org/about-us/careers-with-casa.

Potato

The program/tour will then move to a location on the Barrett Farm, where Miller has 233 different potato varieties for viewing, including 108 red varieties and 125 Russet, which are known for their use as potato chips. Miller also will provide an update on the progress of the program, including a new variety release - Reveille Russet. He said side-by-side planting of each variety allows digging of one row of tubers for the field day, while leaving the second row for plant canopy observation. A field book will be provided with necessary information growers might want for each variety. Dr. Frank Dainello, program coordinator of the Texas-based zebra chip initiative in College Station, will discuss appropriations and progress of the initiative. Douglas Scheuring, AgriLife Research senior research associate in College Station, will discuss current zebra chip research being carried out by the Potato Breeding and Variety Development Program. Barrett will provide an overview of his current production season, and representatives from various potato seed companies will also be present. For more information, contact Miller at 979-219-3388 or jcmillerjr@tamu.edu.

Truck wreck in Amarillo spills tons of beer, bottles

AMARILLO (AP) — A load of bottled beer has ended up in a Texas landfill after a truck hauling tons of the brew overturned and the cargo broke and spilled. Amarillo police say the driver suffered minor injuries in the accident Wednesday morning. Authorities say the driver, who apparently took a turn too quickly, will face a traffic citation. The Amarillo Globe-News reports the 18-wheeler was hauling tons of beer, glass bottles, pallets, crates and other items. City environmental official Shaun May says none of the beer could be salvaged after the wreck. Cleanup lasted several hours. The messy debris was hauled to the Amarillo landfill.

— The Supreme Court on Thursday upheld Texas' refusal to issue a license plate bearing the Confederate battle flag, rejecting a free-speech challenge. The court said in a 5-4 ruling that Texas can limit the content of license plates because they are state property and not the equivalent of bumper stickers. The Sons of Confederate Veterans had sought a Texas plate bearing its logo with the battle flag. A state board rejected it over concerns that the license plate would offend many Texans. Justice Stephen Breyer said the state's decision to reject the group's plate did not violate its free speech rights. Conservative Justice Clarence Thomas and the court's other three liberal justices joined Breyer's opinion.

CLARIFICATION

Earlier this morning, The Pampa News shared a post from "Beg, barter and buy Pampa" concerning cots being sold by Mark Montgomery benefiting the Pampa Firefighter Relief fund. This was rapid reaction post as the Pampa Firefighter relief fund does not exist. The post should have read that the sales will help benefit firefighters across the region, not necessarily Pampa. Montgomery said in a statement, "I apologize for the misuse of terminology. The 'Pampa Firefighter Relief Fund' should have read 'firefighter relief in the Panhandle.' Half of the proceeds from sales will go to relief items delivered to firefighters as the situation arises. Half of the proceeds will also go to Holy Smokes Cook-off on Sept. 4-5 at Pampa Recreation Park."

The Pampa News also wants to apologize for any mix-up or confusion this post may have caused. Holy Smokes has been an contributing organization in the Pampa community for three years. Pampa Fire Department chief Kim Powell also stated this was a quick reaction to let the public know that Pampa Fire Department is not associated with a relief fund, which is why she informed The Pampa News of the post. Powell added that she recognizes Holy Smokes as a legitimate organization who is not in the business of misleading anybody. This incident was the result of a miscommunication and there was no intention of discrediting Holy Smokes as an organization by The Pampa News or Pampa Fire Department. For more information on the cots, contact HolySmokes.US on Facebook. Look for future cot sales commencing later today.

Bereavement and Healing

Pastor's young son dies

I was directing a service today, sitting just out of the congregation's view, at the back of the chapel, giving the Pastor his quest. He was delivering a message to the gathering, and he said something that made everyone listen. He lowered his voice and leaned in toward the microphone. He said that many years ago, when he was a young father and before he was a Pastor, he had lost his young son.

TRACY LEE

He recounted his story and said that he was devastated by the loss, as every parent would be. He felt as though he no longer had a reason to live. One evening as he drifted into slumber, he had a dream. He dreamt his young son was wearing a pair of cutoffs with the fraying dangling in the wind and a yellow tank top. He was holding a baseball glove with one hand and his great grandpa's hand with the other. The Pastor's mother was standing on his son's other side with a sweet smile on her face. At that moment, the Pastor realized he had a purpose for living. He had to change his life so that he would be worthy to join those he loved in heaven. He admonished the congregation to do as he had done many years ago. To restructure any wrong in their lives so that they would be worthy to join those they love in heaven.

Recount your story
One of the most effective recovery techniques available is to recount your experience. Some friends are more tolerant than others when it comes to listening to your grief experience. Sometimes your pain causes them pain. If you find your need to recount your experiences is greater than your friends can bear, seek out a professional counselor. Their work is to listen, and they will be able to help channel your experiences in a positive recovery direction. (Tracy Renee Lee, Mourning Glory II)

The Pastor's message was so basic, so simple, and so sweet. Sharing it was an act of recovery, kindness and resolve for many. As the service ended, I reentered the room to dismiss the congregation. There were many sniffles and many tears. I looked deep into the eyes of each person as they exited the chapel. I saw hope and new resolve looking back at me.

My name is Tracy Renee Lee. I am a funeral director, author, and professional speaker. I write books and weekly bereavement articles related to understanding and coping with grief. I am the American Funeral Director of the Year Runner-Up and recipient of the BBB's Integrity Award. I deliver powerful messages and motivate audiences toward positive recovery. It is my life's work to comfort the bereaved and help them live on. Obama fails to pass trade Bill backed by majorities in both houses

Lyndon Johnson used to say that some of his colleagues were so politically inept they couldn't find their posteriors — actually, he used a coarser word — with both hands. Last week Barack Obama showed that, as a legislative strategist, he belongs in that category.

It's a given that he can't achieve most of his legislative goals with Republican majorities in both houses of Congress. But on trade promotion authority — legislation to require up-or-down approval without amendments of trade agreements — he has fumbled even though, as demonstrated on roll calls, his position is supported by a supermajority in the Senate and a majority in the House. TPA is necessary for successful completion of Obama's Trans-Pacific Partnership and Transatlantic Trade and Investment Partnership negotiations now skillfully conducted by U.S. Trade Representative Michael Froman. Other nations won't reach agreement if Congress can pass amendments requiring further concessions.

Obama has made forthright statements in support of TPA. But he failed to rally his fellow Democrats in the House to stop them from trying to kill it. One curious thing about trade issues is that historically, from the time of Andrew Jackson to John Kennedy, the Democrats were the free trade party. The Republicans from their beginnings to the 1960s were more protectionist. Free trade legislation was Kennedy's No. 1 domestic priority in his first two years as president. It was passed with the support of most Democrats over the opposition of most Republicans. Disabling amendments were offered by Sen. Prescott Bush of Connecticut. But starting in the 1970s, labor unions, hoping to prevent auto and steel job losses, have pushed for more trade protections. They continue to oppose freer trade even though half of union members today are public employees. When Bill Clinton sought approval of the NAFTA agreement with Mexico in 1993, the party balance had shifted. The Senate approved it 61-38, with Democrats evenly split. In the Democratic-majority House, it won 234-200, with yea votes from 102 Democrats and 132 Republicans. Democratic support for free trade continued to slide. In 2003, when the House approved TPA 217-212, only 25 Democrats voted for it, while 27 Republicans voted against it.

It should have been obvious to Obama, months before Friday's TPA vote, that he needed to get some significant number of Democratic votes to get the measure through the House. Too many recently elected Republicans had either taken protectionist stands or didn't trust the president to carry on negotiations. Even more important, he needed to persuade House Democratic leaders not to sabotage his effort. He needed to spend time with them, listen to their concerns and foster a team spirit. But Obama, by all accounts, has had as little time for congressional Democrats as he has had for congressional Republicans. Lyndon Johnson-style schmoozing is not his thing.

The result was apparent Friday. In May, the Senate voted 62-37 for a TPA-TAA package. TAA is Trade Adjustment Assistance, a program intended to aid workers displaced by foreign imports. Policy analysts say it's not very effective, but pro-TPA Democrats can cite it in defense against attacks from unions and primary opponents. Friday the House took up TAA before TPA — and voted TAA down 302-126. It was supported by 86 Republicans (many of whom dislike it) and only 38 Democrats (almost all of whom support it). House Minority Leader Nancy Pelosi led the charge against the president's policy. House Majority Leader Kevin McCarthy didn't flinch but immediately called for a vote on TPA. It passed by a 219-211 margin, with 28 Democratic votes — a margin eerily similar to the TPA vote 13 years ago. But since the Senate bill tied TPA and TAA together, there is no bill for the president to sign. Senate Finance Dem-

Father's Day: Being raised without a father is not a death sentence

I wrote my latest book, "Dear Father, Dear Son: Two Lives, Eight Hours," to personalize the biggest issue facing the country — the growing number of fatherless homes, particularly in the black community, where over 70 percent of children are born to unwed mothers. Being raised without a father is hard. One is more likely to drop out, be unemployed or end up in jail. But it's not a death sentence. The book is about what my father faced and overcame: Only child; irresponsible, illiterate mother; never met his biological father; born in Jim Crow South; kicked out of his house at age 13 — never to return — all as the Great Depression began. It doesn't get much worse than that. He joined the Marines and became a Montford Point Marine — the first black Marines. A few years ago, Congress awarded the 20,000 Montford Point Marines a Congressional Medal. My dad had a private, posthumous ceremony at Camp Pendleton, California. In the Marines, my dad was promoted four times, becoming a staff sergeant. He was in charge of the kitchen, but when he returned to the South after the war, he could not get a job as a cook. "We don't hire n—gers," he was told. "You have no references," some told him — which was just a more polite way of saying the same thing. So he relocated to Los Angeles, a city he once visited when, before the war, he worked on the trains as a Pullman porter. But again, no one would hire him because he lacked "references." So Dad took two jobs as a janitor and cooked for a family on the weekends — while going to night school to get a GED. But my dad was not bitter, never whined about what "the white man" did to him. He said the best weapon against racism was getting really good at what you do. He worked his butt off, and scraped up enough nickels and dimes to start a small restaurant in his late 40s, which he ran until his mid-80s. He was a lifelong Republican. "Welfare was the worst thing that ever came down the pike," he said. He hated the way Democrats "played the race card" and offered "free stuff." Dad would say, "When you try to get something for nothing, you'll end up getting nothing for something." As I wrote "Dear Father," I constantly asked him why he never became bitter, became a criminal or just simply dropped out of life. He looked at me as if I were insane. "What choice did I have?" he said. Becoming a criminal was "not an option." He said when his mom kicked him out of the house, she stood on the porch and, as he walked down the road, yelled, "You'll be back — or end up in the penitentiary!" He turned to me, held up his hand and proudly said, "I've never spent one minute in jail." He repeatedly offered my two brothers and me his lessons-learned mantras: "Hard work wins." "You get out of life want you put into it." "You cannot control the outcome, but you 100 percent control the effort." "When things go wrong — as they will — before blaming others go to the nearest mirror and ask yourself, 'Did I do everything possible to change the outcome?'" And finally: "No matter how hard you work or how good you are, bad things will happen. How you respond to those bad things will tell your mother and me whether we raised a man." A few years before Dad died, he and I were in his garage getting rid of things he no longer wanted. I came across an envelope with a note in it. "What's this?" I asked him. Turns out it was a letter he'd written to my then two-year-old older brother, Kirk. Dad, fearing if something happened to him, wanted to leave him a roadmap for life. Dad had forgotten about the letter: "May 4, 1951

"Kirk, my Son, you are now starting out in life — a life that Mother and I cannot live for you.
"So as you journey through life, remember it's yours, so make it a good one. Always try to cheer up the other fellow.
"Learn to think straight, analyze things, be sure you have all the facts before concluding and always spend less than you earn.
"Make friends, work hard and play hard. Most important of all remember this — the best of friends wear out if you use them.
"This may sound silly, Son, but no matter where you are on the 29th of September (Kirk's birthday), see that Mother gets a little gift, if possible, along with a big kiss and a broad smile.
"When you are out on your own, listen and take advice but do your own thinking, and concluding, set up a reasonable goal, then be determined to reach it. You can and will, it's up to you, Son.

ocrat Ron Wyden, a key TPA supporter, has made it plain the Senate will not pass TPA as stand-alone legislation.

TPA is not necessarily dead. Speaker John Boehner has held open the possibility of a vote to reconsider the TAA portion of the Senate bill in the coming week. Probably some significant number of Republicans who back TPA but voted against TAA can be persuaded to switch their votes.

But that's not likely to be enough to reverse an overwhelming margin without a change of course by House Democrats. Which puts the ball squarely in Obama's court. One's ears burn as one thinks of what Lyndon Johnson would say of his predicament.

Michael Barone, senior political analyst at The Washington Examiner (www.washingtonexaminer.com), where this column first appeared, is a resident fellow at the American Enterprise Institute, a Fox News Channel contributor and a co-author of The Almanac of American Politics.

California reveals details of self-driving car accidents

LOS ANGELES (AP) — California state officials released reports Thursday detailing six accidents that involved self-driving car prototypes, reversing a policy that had shielded details of how the next-generation technology is performing during testing on public roads.

The disclosure came after The Associated Press successfully argued to the Department of Motor Vehicles that the agency was improperly withholding the information.

According to the reports, most of the cars were in self-driving mode when the accidents happened, and the other driver caused the accident. None of the crashes were serious enough to injure the person the state requires to sit behind the wheel, and the reports say none of the people in the other cars were treated for injuries either.

The companies that operated the cars — tech titan Google and parts supplier Delphi Automotive — submitted their own accounts of the accidents. Police have only confirmed investigating the Delphi crash.

Led by Google, self-driving cars have been running on public roads since 2009. It was only in September, however, that the DMV officially began permitting the testing — and specifically requiring companies to file accident reports.

Until now, the agency said it could not reveal details about self-driving car accidents, citing state law making collision reports confidential.

The fact that the agency refused to release the reports bothered critics, who said the public should know how the cars of the future were faring today.

After the DMV denied a public records request, AP argued that the agency was incorrectly citing the confidentiality requirement and that the public has an interest in understanding how these experimental vehicles are performing as they drive public streets and highways.

“Unlocking these records and sharing them with the public are in keeping with AP’s longstanding efforts nationwide to bring about greater transparency in government agencies,” AP spokesman Paul Colford said.

In a letter that accompanied the documents, DMV attorney Roger Sato wrote, “After further review, DMV has determined that it is possible to release the factual information related to the autonomous vehicle reports” as long as the drivers’ personal information and other details such as insurance information is blacked out.

While eight companies have permission to test 82 self-driving cars in California, Google has driven the most miles driven (about 1.8 million) and licensed the most prototypes (53).

After several years of revealing little about crashes, Google has in recent weeks become more open about their number and nature.

After AP reported last month that there had been three Google accidents and one Delphi accident, Google self-driving car project leader Chris Urmson revealed in a blog post that its cars had been involved in eight other accidents between 2010 and July 2014.

DMV officials had not been aware of those eight until an April conference call with Google, agency spokeswoman Jessica Gonzalez said.

In California, a driver is required to report to the DMV any accident involving more than $750 of property damage.

A Google spokeswoman could not say whether the company had filed reports on any of the initial eight accidents to the DMV, and said she could not provide damage estimates because repairs were done in-house, without a bill.

The DMV said it could not search its records for earlier reports without date and location information that Google has provided to neither AP nor the agency.

At Google’s annual shareholders meeting earlier this month, co-founder Sergey Brin told a longtime critic with the nonprofit Consumer Watchdog that releasing accident reports would serve no purpose because Urmson’s blog post detailed the accidents. Two days later, Google launched a website which offered short narratives describing each collision.

The documents that the DMV released Thursday offered few new details, other than the date and time of the accidents and the make and model of the other cars.

Five accidents involved Lexus SUVs that Google outfitted with sensors and cameras. The sixth involved an Audi retrofitted by Delphi. All were in the Silicon Valley cities of Mountain View or Palo Alto.

In four of Google’s five accidents, the Lexus was in self-driving mode, according to the reports. In the fifth, the SUV began applying its brakes when it sensed a 2015 Audi S6 had run a stop sign and was about to hit it; the person behind the wheel took control of the Lexus just before the Audi hits its right rear.

The crash of the Delphi car occurred when the car was waiting at an intersection.

It is hard to know for sure how typical Google’s experience is. With four accidents in the past approximately 100,000 miles, Google’s recent accident rate appears to be higher than the federally reported national average. About 0.3 “property-damage-only crashes” happen per 100,000 miles driven, according to the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration.

Google officials have said they are proud of the safety record. Noting that as many as 5 million minor accidents are not reported to authorities each year, they conclude that the cluster of “fender benders” in recent months reflects the true rate at which minor accidents happen.

DAILY Horoscope

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Saturday, June 20, 2015:

This year you open up to quite a few opportunities that seem to drop in your lap. August could be a very fortunate month with relationships, communication and your daily life in general. You easily could be extravagant with your spending. Be careful. If you are single, you are likely to meet someone special by fall. You will want to settle in and spend more time with this person. If you are attached, as a couple, you might be considering a new addition to your home that adds to the quality of your life. LEO tends to energize you and encourage you to be more open.

The Stars Show the Kind of Day You'll Have: 5-Dynamic; 4-Positive; 3-Average; 2-So-so; 1-Difficult

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
 ★★★★★ You might be acting as if the first day of summer has come a day early, and you could be feeling unusually spirited. You will have a great time no matter what if you just go with the flow. A loved one will delight in your mood. Tonight: Celebrate whatever you want.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
 ★★★★★ Zero in on what is important to you. Invite others over later in the day for a nice, relaxing day. You love your place when it is fixed up like you want it to be. You love your friends, and they are highly appreciative of your efforts. Tonight: Get the most out of every moment.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
 ★★★★★ You have a way of drawing others in, but once you turn up the charisma, you'll become irresistible. People won't be able to ignore you. An unexpected good deed or a surprising statement from a friend will just add to the excitement of the day. Tonight: Hang with friends.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
 ★★★★★ Be more forthright in how you deal with a gift. You might opt to indulge a loved one with a very special day where you plan an adventure that is sure to make him or her smile. Be spontaneous and go for a different type of experience. Tonight: Be where there is music.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
 ★★★★★ The Moon in your sign allows you to draw in what you desire, as long as you know what it is. Otherwise, you will have to see what your subconscious wants by what plays out today. Maintain a sense of humor and stay open. Tonight: You could go for hours and hours.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
 ★★★★★ Note how much is going on around you. In fact, you might want to grab the opportunity to vanish when others are so busy and distracted. Be sure to take a day just for you. Don't hesitate to be unavailable for at least a little while. Tonight: You decide what works for you.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
 ★★★★★ You might want to think through a problem with greater care, but your friends and others around you are unlikely to permit you to have a single quiet moment. Get into the celebratory mood. A loved one might be full of surprises. Tonight: Where your friends are.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
 ★★★★★ You might need to handle a responsibility that could involve a demanding individual. A conversation could be difficult. You know what you want, and it probably doesn't involve being tied up with this person. Make your escape in the afternoon. Tonight: In good company.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
 ★★★★★ You might desire a change of pace. Know that a surprise that heads your way could force you to adjust your plans. It is quite possible that you'll head out to visit with a friend whom you don't often get to see. Tonight: Let go, and be a little naughty.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
 ★★★★★ You might want to understand what is happening with a loved one. The unexpected runs rampant, especially with your family. Go with the flow, as you cannot change what is happening. A loved one will be delighted by your presence. Tonight: Special time with a loved one.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
 ★★★★★ You are likely to note that others seem unusually jovial. Listen to what is happening with a favorite person. You could decide to hang out with him or her. Watch closely at this individual's ability to make the most of every moment of the day. Tonight: Go for something fun.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
 ★★★★★ You might not want to see a situation differently, but someone around you will try to help you see another point of view. Use caution with your funds, and don't immediately agree to an adventure that could be costly. Tonight: Play it light and easy.

PAMPASports

From the Press Box

Why can't we get a good all-star game in any of the major sports?

I have to admit, I am an all-star fan. This is why I like to play fantasy sports and use all-star teams on sports video games sometimes.

But I also have to say there is an aspect to the all-star sport I don't like. The games in real life. Unfortunately, these games never live up to the hype and I honestly don't think the true stars from that season make the games.

Let's start with baseball's All-Star Game. First off, the voting is strictly online. This hurts the sport because there is the older fan-base who may not be technologically savvy and can't or won't vote. All-star games are one place where stats should matter. A player can personally be having a great year and the team not be successful, especially in baseball. The Kansas City Royals currently hold eight positions, including designated hitter, as of July 14. There is only one Royal in the Top 5 (batting average) for the top statistical categories for hitters, Mike Moustakas. But since casual fans, or those who don't look at stats, may not know who around the league are having great seasons, they will just vote for the representatives of the previous year's World Series, or a traditional powerhouse.

This turns the All-Star game fan voting into the equivalent of a high school student council election; the popular kids win the votes. If the players who truly have the better seasons won the elections, maybe the quality of these games would be better.

2014's All-Star Game was a respectable 5-3 game, but the scores from the previous four were 2013 3-0, 2012 8-0, 2011 5-1 and 2010 3-1.

If you have the best hitters in all of baseball in the game, you should have more offense in these games, theoretically.

Maybe Major League Baseball should hold their games later in the year by a month or two, that way the fan voting has a better chance to reflect that year's talent.

Now let's move on to the NFL's all-star game, The Pro Bowl. The quality of these games have improved and the NFL has completely re-vamped their Pro Bowl process. They got rid of the conference affiliation. They set up an all-star draft for two team captains. The voting has also improved plenty. I checked last year's roster and I couldn't find a player who didn't have a good season, statistically.

But for years the NFL Pro Bowl was a joke. Players wouldn't give 100 percent and, they still might not, but the quality of the games have improved dramatically. What do you think of all-star games?

Pictured is what used to be the women's restroom side of the concessions stand. The restrooms, mens and womens, are being renovated to become ADA compliant and add more stalls. The concessions stand will no longer exist at this location, but rather where the ticket booth used to be at the entry to the stadium. More pictures of the construction can be found on page 3B.

AUSTIN (AP) — The University of Texas will start selling beer and wine to fans at home football games beginning this fall.

Beer and wine were already sold at other sporting events, but Royal-Memorial Stadium had remained alcohol-free. The school announced the change Wednesday.

Athletic director Steve Patterson proposed alcohol sales last year, but the plan was nixed by former Chancellor Francisco Cigarroa.

New President Greg Fenves said on his first day on the job that he supported alcohol sales at football, and first-year Chancellor Bill McRaven agreed.

The Longhorns' first home game next season at the stadium with a capacity of 100,000 people is Sept. 12 against Rice.

Dear Abby...

By Pauline & Jeanne Phillips

DEAR ABBY: I recently married for the second time. My first husband was verbally and emotionally abusive. My new husband is kindhearted and takes good care of me. I have one problem though. He curses all the time. (I don't think he realizes he is doing it anymore.)

I believe that cursing makes a person look ignorant. What bothers me most are his racist jokes. I have told him I don't like hearing him insult other races or cultures, but he still does it. He thinks the jokes are funny and he shares them with his kids.

I don't think he is really racist; I just think he's emotionally immature and doesn't realize how rude his behavior is. What do I do? I'm embarrassed by it and don't want to encourage it in his kids. — NO JOKE

DEAR NO JOKE: Your second husband may treat you better than your previous one, but it appears you have married a man who is both a racist and a bigot. I don't blame you for being embarrassed, because jokes of this nature reflect more upon the person telling them than the minority that's being ridiculed. Point that out to him, if you haven't already. And you should definitely explain it to his kids so they'll understand that this kind of humor will label them.

DEAR ABBY: After 15 years of trying to establish a relationship with my in-laws, I recently decided to sever my contact with them. They have been deceptive and talk about me to my husband in whispers behind my back. I understand his loyalty to his family, but I strongly feel that continuing to deny that their behavior is unhealthy is unhealthy for me. Being forced to see them makes me physically ill.

How can I help my husband see that he can have a relationship with his parents without my participation? — I'M DONE, IN ARIZONA DEAR DONE: Avoiding your in-laws isn't the answer. If your husband hasn't stood up to his parents and sided with you before now, your marriage is in trouble. Find a licensed marriage counselor who can "help" him realize that what his parents have been doing is undercutting his wife and sabotaging his marriage. Then cross your fingers that he's strong enough to do something to correct it.

DEAR ABBY: How can I gently break the news to my sister that I am pregnant? She has been trying to conceive for more than a year, but is still unsuccessful. (I got pregnant within a month of trying.)

What can I do to avoid hurting her feelings when I tell her? I'm only a few weeks along, so I haven't told anyone except my husband, of course. — EXPECTING IN THE EAST

DEAR EXPECTING: Infertility issues can be extremely painful for couples who have been trying to have a child, particularly if the problem has been going on for some time. You should tell your sister privately, in person, and before you start to show. I don't think it's necessary to mention that you became pregnant after only one month, because it might appear that you are gloating.

AREAS OF HARVESTER STADIUM YET TO BE TOUCHED

Photos by Zachary Green

Left, the sharp grade on the entry into the stands will be changed to make it easier to get up into the stands. The band section is the only one with a railing currently, there will be more railings installed to be ADA compliant. Right, the press box will not be torn down, but it is getting a huge facelift. Athletic Director Greg Poyner says construction should start soon. The press box will get new paint, new windows, a new air conditioning and heating system, a renovated bathroom and an elevator to become ADA compliant. The Pampa News will continue to check on the progress and bring updates in the form of pictures or articles throughout the summer. Construction is on progress to be completed by the first home football game this fall.

FUTURE LADY HARVESTERS LEARNING FROM CURRENT PLAYERS AND STAFF

Photos by Zachary Green

The Lady Harvesters have hosted a camp all week for future Lady Harvester basketball players. The camp has been held in the Cavalier Activity Center as well as McNeely Fieldhouse. While The Pampa News was at the camp on Thursday, the kids were doing a dribbling game where they tried to knock the ball out of other player's hands while maintaining their dribble. This was the morning session of camp with the younger age group. Look for a group photo of this camp, photos from tennis camp and photos from the older kids basketball camp in future editions of The Pampa News.

Gundy: NCAA investigation helps Oklahoma State

STILLWATER, Okla. (AP) — Oklahoma State football coach Mike Gundy ignored the Sports Illustrated articles that brought major allegations against his program two years ago.

"I never read any of them," he told The Associated Press on Tuesday. "My assistant read them, and she kind of told me what was going on, but I refused to read them because I knew they weren't true."

In the end, the NCAA mostly agreed with Gundy.

Sports Illustrated said it interviewed more than 60 former players and found evidence of potential NCAA violations under former coach Les Miles and Gundy dating to 2001. There were allegations of cash payments to players, academic misconduct, inconsistent enforcement of drug policies and some of the school's recruiting hostesses having sex with prospects from 2001-10. After a joint investigation that included the review of approximately 50,000 emails and documents and nearly 100 interviews, the NCAA and Oklahoma State said last October that the most egregious allegations were "fundamentally unfounded," and the minimal penalties reflected that. The NCAA Committee on Infractions put Oklahoma State on a year of probation for failing to follow its own drug-testing policies.

Now, with the investigation finally behind him, Gundy said the Sports Illustrated series created a unique opportunity and has actually helped the program.

"It's over now, and essentially, what it did was, it gave Oklahoma State a clean slate," he said. "It let people know we're doing things the right way."

Gundy was relieved when the NCAA announced its penalties in April. He said he actually expected more violations to be found, given the depth of the investigation. Sports Illustrated has stood by its reporting.

"When you investigate 12 years, give or take, and this is all they came up with at a big-time college football program who's won BCS bowls and had a lot of success — we should all be doing cartwheels and celebrating," Gundy said. "And that's the truth. And if it would have been something other, then I would have said, 'You know what? It is what it is.'"

Gundy said he takes pride in running a clean program, so the situation made him feel "somewhat vulnerable and violated."

"It really hurt me because I'm here every day," he told The Associated Press. "There was not that much that could have gone on without me knowing."

Gundy remembers people around him being on edge and "racing to the computer" to read the first article in September 2013. Eventually, as the fallout dragged on, a cloud of uncertainty hovered over the program.

"It went on for so long that you forget about it, but it still gets brought up, and you think, 'Well, that's still out there, and we don't know," he said. "It is a breath of fresh air, cold water running over you now that it's over with."

Gundy said some people affiliated with Oklahoma State refused to get involved with the story.

"They (Sports Illustrated) went and found everybody they could to say things and try to find as much negative publicity as possible, and I know for a fact that they tried to find other people, and showed up on their doorstep, and people refused to talk to them," he said.

Gundy said he believes Oklahoma State was targeted because its fortunes have turned. The Cowboys had one winning season in the 1990s, yet has had nine bowl appearances in 10 years under Gundy and was in contention for a national title in 2011.

"Somebody said there's no way Oklahoma State can play at a high level of football this long without cheating," he said.

For the next two years, Oklahoma State is limited to 30 official visits per year during the 2015-16 and 2016-17 seasons. It will also reduce the number of coaches participating in off-campus evaluations from 10 to nine in the fall and nine to eight in the spring, and it will reduce the number of evaluation days by 10 in the fall and spring during both years.

Orange Pride, the group of recruiting hostesses, was not sufficiently aligned with the admissions office. All hosting duties the group performed were impermissible, so the group was suspended. According to last October's report, current or former players who were interviewed reported they had no sexual activity with any Orange Pride members.

"I was disappointed in that because there was so much negative publicity about the girls — the young ladies involved, and they've been super for us," Gundy said. "They've been first class. They've been so far from what they (the series) said, and I hated that for the young women because they don't deserve that. That really bothered me. These young ladies were very innovative and great resources for the student-athletes and parents at this university."

The NCAA said five players competed in a total of seven games from 2008-2012 when they should have been benched for violating drug policies. According to the NCAA, Oklahoma State athletic director Mike Holder deferred to Gundy's recommendation on whether to suspend players who failed a drug test.

"My job is to do what I think is best for the players," Gundy said. "It's just like raising kids. But I saw the reason it (the penalties) happened, and I was able to accept it, because in black and white, this is what it said, and I came off of it a little bit because I thought it was best for the players. So I accept that responsibility, and I'm OK with it."
