Bus Line Attempting to Discontinue Local Service

Without any public notice to residents of Foard County, the Texas, New Mexico and Oklahoma Coaches held a meeting here last Friday morning concerning their plans to discontinue bus service from Plainview to Vernon which would stop all bus service to Crowell and other towns along the route.

Clyde M. Owens of Lubbock, president of Texas, New Mexico and Oklahoma Coaches, told local residents that his company has incurred a net loss of $22,126.74 during the first six months of 1975, from operation of a daily bus from Lubbock to Vernon and back.

He said the company during the six month period operated buses a total of 73,486 miles with revenues totalling $36,566.53 and expenses totalling $22,252, leading his company to file with the Texas Railroad Commission for the right to abandon the Vernon to Plainview segment of the route.

State Senator Ray Farabee on August 15 sent the following letter to the commissioner of the Texas Railroad Commission, to which application was made by the carrier to discontinue the bus service:

"The application noted above will, in my opinion, be detrimental to the interests of the citizens now being served by this bus route. For many of the communities involved, Texas, New Mexico, and Oklahoma Coaches provides the only bus and common carrier service available.

"As a result, discontinuance of service along this route will mean a severe inconvenience for those persons who depend on bus service for transportation, particularly our older citizens.

"Also, this route provides the only expeditious means of obtaining commodities such as medical drugs. Many businesses depend on this service for the materials necessary to carry on their activities.

"Since passenger and package transportation are vital needs of this area, I hope careful consideration will be given before any cancellation of service is authorized. If I can furnish any further information on this matter, please contact me."

In addition to writing the Railroad Commission, Senator Farabee has sent some additional information on writing letters to the Railroad Commission concerning the proposed change. He urges everyone concerned to voice their opinion to the RR commission and gives the following guidelines for writing the letters:

1. Letters to the Commission do not have to be on any special form, plain paper will do. Letters can also be hand written, however, one should be careful that they are legible.

2. Near the top of the first page write "Notice of Protest." This will help the Commission quickly determine the purpose of the letter.

3. Below "Notice of Protest" include the following information: "re: Notice #7817, Application of Texas, New Mexico, and Oklahoma Coaches to discontinue service over U. S. Highway 70 between Vernon and Plainview. Motorbus docket #200 and Common Carrier docket #3986."

4. Once the above information is included explain why you feel bus service should not be discontinued along this route.

It is important to keep in mind that while the Railroad Commission is interested in common carrier or package service their primary concern is with passenger service. Therefore, it will be of the utmost importance for us to show the need for bus service for passengers, if you know of anyone who depends on the bus for transportation please contact them and ask them to also write the Railroad Commission.

Letters should be sent to: James H. Cowden, Director of the Transportation Division, Texas Railroad Commission, Capitol Station, Austin, Texas 78711.

Uniform School Tax Stirs Fight in Maine

A new budget-cutting mood has emerged in Maine and the legislature, bending to this mood, has placed limits on the state's innovative education law. But the law survives.

By JERRY HARKAVY

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP)—An equal education for every child. And Maine is trying to lead the way, despite a tax revolt.

Two years ago, the legislature enacted Legislative Document 1994, a landmark law designed to eliminate inequities in school financing through the use of a uniform property tax for education.

The law went into effect in the 1974-75 school year and it wiped out some of the time-honored advantages of the state's wealthier communities. For the first time, the poorest towns and cities were assured enough tax dollars to operate quality schools.

SOME PEOPLE have hailed 1994 as a model for the nation. But the first year of experience has been one of great controversy. A $20 million deficit in the state's school budget has been blamed by some on the new law, and a tax revolt has developed in some wealthy coastal towns where school taxes rose.

Castine, for example, has voted to refuse to collect the new state school tax. Three other communities decided at town meetings to put their school tax money in escrow when it's collected this summer, pending a court test.

A COURT TEST, if it went to the U.S. Supreme Court, might have an impact elsewhere in the country. Montana is the only other state with a law similar to Maine's. But other states are considering enactment of a uniform school tax, according to the U.S. Office of Education.

Opposition to 1994 has helped spawn a movement called the Freedom Fighters. Various local groups using this name were formed last winter to fight what they consider too much state interference in town government.

James B. Longley, who took office this year as the nation's only governor without party affiliation, has advocated repeal of the school finance law. A citizen's group, calling itself Save Our State, is circulating petitions asking the legislature to repeal the law, or to put it to a statewide referendum.

BACK IN 1973, equalization seemed to many Maine lawmakers like an idea whose time had come. The California Supreme Court's ruling in Serrano v. Priest had struck down the use of local property taxation as the basis for school funding.

The Maine Teachers Association had gone to court with a Serrano-type suit, and the attitude at the State House was act voluntarily, or be forced into action by the judiciary.

Even the Rodriguez decision, a Texas case in which the U.S. Supreme Court ruled 5-4 against the Serrano principle that the quality of a child's education should not be determined by the wealth of the community in which he resides, did not blunt the drive toward reform in Maine.

IN MAINE, as in most other states, the local tax on real estate was the principal device for paying the tab for education. About two-thirds of all nonfederal money spent on schools was raised locally and spent locally.

Consequently, there were big differences between schools in the wealthiest and the poorest towns. Communities with high property valuations could afford new buildings, college-level electives, good laboratories, swimming pools. Others made do with barebones programs.

First, legislative document 1994 boosted to 50 per cent what had been 35 per cent—the chunk of total education costs the state would pay from its general fund, made up largely of sales and income taxes.

It was the other 50 per cent that has caused all the trouble. Every town and city, rich and poor alike, would pay to the state a new uniform property tax for education. The law in practice raised the school tax rate for the wealthy communities and lowered it for the poorer ones.

THE STATE was the middleman, collecting the tax from the municipalities and returning it according to an arcane formula designed to lead to an equal expenditure for each pupil. It was Robin Hood resurrected, taking from the rich and giving to the poor.

But a new mood of budget-cutting has emerged in this state capital. After eight years of burgeoning state government under Gov. Kenneth M. Curtis, a progressive Democrat, independent Longley was elected in November on a promise to control the bureaucracy and hold the line on taxes.

AS THE LONGLEY administration struggled this winter and spring to live up to its pledge of a balanced budget within existing revenue, a $20 million deficit developed in school finances—a deficit some blamed on the new law. Others said it would have developed anyway because of inflation and rising pupil enrollment.

There were other problems. Legislative Document 1994 placed a ceiling on the amount each local school district could spend from funds raised locally in addition to the uniform state school tax. This drew criticism from wealthy towns with expensive school programs.

CAPE ELIZABETH, a well-to-do Portland suburb, feared that it would have to reduce its teaching staff and eliminate special programs. It urged the legislature to raise the ceiling on local spending, and the legislature finally agreed this spring to do so.

The legislature also adopted two other major changes in the law. One was a one-time-only rebate to the wealthy towns whose taxes had jumped sharply as a result of 1994. The other was a limit on many school expenditures to prevent another deficit.

Geese Tagged in Arctic

As part of a cooperative program to learn more about white-fronted geese, Texas Parks and Wildlife Department waterfowl biologist Max Traweck of Canyon joined with members of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the Alaska Fish and Game Department in trapping and banding 1,339 geese on their arctic grounds.

Traweck spent June 23 - July 18 in Alaska assisting in trapping and branding birds in two locations, one near the small village of Galena on the Yukon River 260 air miles west of Fairbanks and the other near the Arctic Ocean some 75 air miles southeast of Barrow.

"Three airplanes were utilized throughout the operation for traveling and in the actual trapping of birds," according to Traweck's report.

"Our method of operation involved all three planes searching the rivers for sizeable flocks of molting, flightless geese with suitable traplines nearby."

When a suitable flock was located, one aircraft would land and four men would set up the trap, always around a bend and out of sight of the birds. The fifth man, piloting a single-engine plane, would remain in the air above the birds to keep them from moving away from the trapline.

Using both planes and a small boat, the biologists would drive the flightless geese into the nets.

Traweck and crew banded a total of 577 geese at Galena.

Nephew of Local Residents Makes Movie About Noah's Ark

"The Ark of Noah" a motion picture made by Bart LaRue, son of a former Crowell resident and nephew of three Foard Countians, is now being shown in several movie houses in west Texas.

The movie began last Wednesday in Abilene Civic Center, and will probably be shown in other Texas cities.

LaRue is the son of Mrs. H. A. Sherrill of Sweetwater and he is a nephew of Mrs. Dink Woods, Mrs. Ector Sollis and John Teague, all of Crowell.

The Abilene Reporter News last week had a story on LaRue and his movie, and portions of the story are reproduced here.

Is Noah's Ark a myth, or is it a huge reality?

In a two hour film entitled

"The Ark of Noah," former Abilene resident Bart LaRue explores the story of Noah and the great flood expertly enough to believe it may win him an Academy Award nomination.

"I already know it will be nominated," he said in an interview this week.

LaRue, a former television personality and now a Los Angeles film producer, and Abilene oilman Jack Grimm, his associate producer on the project, are organizing the film's world premiere in Abilene Wednesday.

LaRue and Grimm both have made trips to Mt. Ararat in Turkey in the past five years, but neither was able to reach the 14,000-foot level on the 17,000-foot peak where the ark is believed to rest.

In an unauthorized excursion onto the mountain last year, LaRue says he had a close call with the Turkish military and was literally forced back down.

But he has traveled the world, visiting such places as The Louvre in Paris and the British Museum, to gather material to support his theses "that there was a flood, there was a great boat, there were survivors."

LaRue is the narrator in the film as well as the writer and producer. Neither he nor Grimm will say what the film cost, and they declined to name the others who helped finance it.

"This was a story that had never been told on film before," LaRue said, adding that material from several previous expeditions to the ice-topped mountain is used.

He and Grimm said that men sent to find the ark by Archbishop John Joseph Nourri in 1887 and by Czar Nicholas of Russia in 1916 brought back accounts of finding a huge boat in the ice cap and of exploring some of the rooms in it and measuring its length at about 500 feet.

A French industrialist, Fernand Nararra, explored

Mt. Ararat in 1955, found some queros oak timbers in ice cravass and wrote a book in 1974 called "Noah's Ark: I Touched It" as a result.

Grimm and LaRue said the ice, which covers the top 4,000 feet of the peak, melts back enough to show the ark only every two decades or so.

"They have had a model made—at a scale of an inch per six feet—to show what the ark is believed to have been.

"The construction was very similar to today's oil barges," Grimm said in an interview. They believe it was 450 to 500 feet long, 75 feet wide and 45 feet high. It had hundreds of rooms for people and animals, they think, and the interior construction was in three levels. The model shows a covered roof.

The men have been working on the film for two years, and the filming has occupied LaRue for a year and a half.

There will also be openings soon in Salt Lake City, Utah, and Oklahoma City.

Grimm and LaRue have few differences in opinion about the ark, but one is that Grimm believes the flood was "between" 4,000 and 5,000 years ago while LaRue accepts the traditional 5,000 years.

Consulting hieroglyphics, the Bible, Armenian history and other sources, they said they believe that Noah was a king in a land called Sherruppak, which would have been 500 miles south of Mt. Ararat and near the Persian Gulf where Iraq is today.

The film makes no claim that Noah built the ark alone but that he had a lot of help and became known as the builder because he directed its construction.

LaRue, a television actor until five years ago, and Grimm, who plays cards well enough to be known as "Cadillac Jack" in Las Vegas, may seem an odd couple to go in together on a film about Noah's Ark, but they both grew up in Taylor County and cite early religious training as the first step in their interest in the story of God warning Noah of the impending flood and commanding him to build the ark.

Grimm also says he is a geologist by trade and is interested in that respect.

They have some queros oak which Navarra brought down from the mountain and which carbon-dating tests have dated back some 4,500

Sara Collins and Russell Swanson Wed

Wedding vows were exchanged by Miss Sara Beth Collins and J. Russell Swanson II on Sunday, August 17, in a beautifully simple double ring ceremony solemnized in Lovers Lane United Methodist Church in Dallas. The bride wore a floor-length white gown with flowers in her hair, and carried out the traditional "something old, borrowed, and blue." She was attended by Mrs. Eve Gronholz, who wore a floor-length blue gown. Serving the bridegroom as best man was his father, Judge Russell Swanson of Enid, Ok. Immediately following the wedding, Mr. and Mrs. Tracey de Forest hosted a reception at their home. After September 1, the couple will reside in Austin, where both are employed. Attending the wedding from Crowell were Mayme Lee Collins, Mrs. Jack Thomas and Mrs. Elton Carroll, aunts of the bride. Independence is the greatest gift parents can help their children obtain, according to Mrs. Ilene Miller with the extension service.

Daughter of R. B. Cates Wed Recently

A bridal bouquet of multi-colored spring flowers set the scene for the recent nuptials between Debbie Cates and Ron Lowry. The wedding was held at 2:30 p. m. in First Southern Baptist Church of Lynwood, Ca. Debbie Cates is the daughter of R. B. Cates of Crowell and Lela Cates of Huntington Park, Ca. The new bridegroom's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Elvora Lowry, live in Lynwood. Rev. Herb Carson officiated for their ceremonies. As something old, the bride wore a string of her mother's pearls. She was given away by her father. The traditional bridal gown featured a scalloped neckline, fitted sleeves and long train. The veiling, accented with clusters of applied flowers, was caught to a bandeau in the bride's dark tresses. Assisting the bride as matron of honor was Mrs. Gary (Janet) Ballard, whose bouquet was of white daisies and orange baby roses. Mmes. Richard (Debbie) Sutherland, Jack (Joyce) Simmons and Ted (Cindy) De Moe, attired in long gowns of a blue print, were Debbie's selections as bridesmaids. They carried white daisies and wore white wide-brimmed hats. Dishwashers are one of the fastest-selling major appliances! Depending on family size and entertaining, a dishwasher can save 28-52 eight-hour days a year. The automatic dishwasher is not just a luxury appliance. A dishwasher saves water, using an average of 10-15 gallons per load. Using a water temperature of at least 140 degrees is more sanitary than washing dishes by hand. Less breakage occurs because dishes are handled less. The three basic models available are the top-opening portable, front-opening portable and the built-in model. Some basic points to consider in any model are racks that allow easy movement and loading. An automatic detergent dispenser, a switch to stop the dishwasher during a cycle if desired. No special plumbing is needed for portables. Built-in models need a drain connection and water piped to the machine. To keep flatware from tarnishing avoid spilling detergent directly on flatware. Using the wrong type of detergent or too much detergent may cause leaks. Other possible causes include a kink in the drain hose, a damaged door seal, or an unlevel dishwasher. This appliance which is in 30% of the nation's household relieves the homemaker of a monotonous, repetitive and time-consuming daily task.

Prepare to Meet God

This question has come to us. "What is the meaning of the statement in Amos 4:12, 'prepare to meet thy God'?"

From time to time God judged Israel in her acts of faithfulness or unfaithfulness. Each time He passed judgment on them it was as a nation and for the purpose of trying to get them to return to Him.

This exhortation by Amos is not to the nation of Israel but to the individual, "prepare to meet thy God." Thus we see God now trying to get the people individually to prepare to meet their maker.

The parallel is that people today should make preparation to meet Him because everyone will someday. The invitation of Christ can be likened to the exhortation of Amos. As Amos exhorted the individuals of the ten tribes not to despond but make preparation, so Christ encourages and invites us to do the same. Let us examine the Scriptures.

We find in the Book that judgment will be universal...every man will be judged. Judgment is not reserved for the good man only nor for the evil man only, but for every man. Christ said, speaking of himself, "And before him shall be gathered all nations and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats." Matthew 25:32. In Romans 14:12, Paul writes, "So then every one of us shall give account of himself to God." Thus judgment will be universal—every man shall be judged on his own works (life), 2 Corinthians 5:10.

The invitation of Christ should be heeded by us as the exhortation of Amos should have been by Israel. This is important to note: that judgment will be on an individual basis and that YOU must prepare for this meeting, this judgment.

Will you heed the invitation of Christ? Listen to Him: "Come unto me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy and my burden is light." Matthew 11:28-30.

Total Moratorium of Producer Sales of Wheat Called for

A total moratorium on the sale of wheat by producers into the grain marketing system was called for last week by Leo Witkowski, president of the Texas Wheat Producers Association in response to action of Secretary of Agriculture Earl Butz, which placed an embargo on further grain exports until the next crop report due September 11.

Witkowski said that "the action of the Secretary serves to distort downward the true value of the new crop now in producers' hands despite a growing world demand." He said that, "unless producers maintain control over the ownership of their grain stocks, speculators and international conglomerate grain trading firms stand to gain control of the grain at depressed prices and gouge the American and foreign consumers as the firms then demand excess profits at a later date of resale."

The veteran farm leader pointed out that "the Secretary of Agriculture called today's crop report 'inconclusive' as to the U. S. ability to export despite the fact that the report indicated record crops of wheat and other grains far bigger than a year ago—wheat up 19%, corn up 26%, milo up 29%, soybeans up 18%."

Witkowski said that "even though wheat prices had strengthened some over pre-harvest lows under pressure of rigid farmer 'orderly marketing' techniques and growing export prospects, but at today's $3.60 per bushel in the Plains area prior to the USDA announcement, are $1.27 a bushel below the price last October when the wheat was planted for domestic and export use. The price of wheat to the farmer is a full dollar below the parity level of $4.60 per bushel—a figure showing relationships to that comparable to other goods and services."

Witkowski said "it's regrettable that the Secretary of Agriculture is yielding to the big labor bosses who are disguised as 'protectors of the consumer cost of living' by advocating stopping exports. In fact, while wheat producers are receiving $1.27 a bushel less for wheat now than last October, longshoremen who load grain on ships received 85 cents an hour base pay increase at that time and are scheduled by contract for another 60 cents per hour increase this October 1. These are the true inflationary inputs to the cost of living in this country—and not the sagging prices of wheat and other agricultural raw materials

"The wheat producers' call for a moratorium on producer sales will be lifted," according to the association president, "when the Secretary lifts the export embargo."

Family Leaves on Return Trip to Brazil

Mr. and Mrs. Tom Crowell and sons, Jon, Dan and Rob, left Sunday to fly to Cuiba, Brazil, where Mr. and Mrs. Crowell will continue their work among the Bororo Indian tribe.

Working through the Wycliffe Bible Translators, the Crowells plan to be there a year while he completes his dissertation on the grammar of the Bororos. At the end of that year they will go to Cornell University in Ithaca, N. Y. for one semester during which time he will finish any work that remains on his Ph.D. degree.

The Crowell family has been in the U. S. for two years on a leave of absence during which time he has been doing work on his doctoral degree in linguistics.

During this past summer, Mr. and Mrs. Crowell taught field methods in linguistics at the Summer Institute of Linguistics at the University of Oklahoma in Norman. The family has during the summer spent several week ends in Crowell visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Marion Crowell, and they have been speakers at several local church services telling of their experiences with the Bororo tribe.

During the Colonial period in America, no textile product was considered disposable. Every scrap was saved and recycled as long as possible. One happy result was the emergence of patchwork, a uniquely American art form, Margaret Ann Vanderpoorten, clothing specialist with the extension service, notes.

SHADED LAWNS NEED CARE

Shaded lawns need special care during the summer months, points out a turfgrass specialist for the extension service. He suggests mowing higher and more frequently, giving particular attention to controlling leaf diseases, and removing tree leaves that fall. Shaded turf is generally weaker than grass receiving sunlight and therefore is more susceptible to drought stress and disease attacks.

Local People Attend SCS Meeting

Thomas Shinn and Mr. and Mrs. David Seitz and children, Dave and Sherylene, all of Crowell, were among the more than 3,000 people who attended the 30th annual meeting of the Soil Conservation Society of America held last week in San Antonio.

Theme of the meeting was "Land Use: Food and Living." Activities began on Sunday with a reception. Senator George McGovern (D-So. Dak.) delivered the keynote address on Monday morning and an awards banquet concluded the meeting on Wednesday.

The Society is a professional association of natural resource conservationists dedicated to advancing the science and art of good land use. It has about 14,000 members in the United States, Canada and more than 80 other countries.

Besides attending the meetings, the group enjoyed visiting Paseo Del Rio (San Antonio's River walk); famous Brackenridge Park, which is a reclaimed strip-mined cement excavation; the Alamo, and other historic sites.
