A BREEZIE REPORT

Austin, Texas, March 26, 1920
Dear Chief:

"The Ides of March," when Censar was killed, has passed and finds old man Heare and the Miami bunch alive and well, notwithstanding last week was examination week for the Winter Term in the University. The chunks of knowledge that were reeled off by near 4000 students last week in answer to Quizmasters has caused the March winds to blow variably, some of them really chilly. The great underlying principles of knowledge that are being stored away in the mental archives of faithful students will doubtless bear fruit in future activities of life by these young men and young ladies who are fitting themselves for responsible positions in our social, moral, political and economic problems. Why educate our children? Why spend long years of preparation and much money for higher education? Need I answer the questions? Oh, no! They are answered in every mind, in every heart, in every home, in every industry, in every phrase of social fabric, in every community, pro bono publico, for the public good.

Old Man Heare's opportunities for learning were limited to the bitter school of experience. These lessons are more costly, of less value, and a much longer time is required to get anything of real value than in a scientific course in our splendid schools of today. They are costly and unsatisfactory. Only a faint smattering of this, that and the other, can be gained by experience in a long lifetime. Hence, the necessity of training the young minds by the best possible methods in order to fit them at early manhood or womanhood to enter into the various activities of life in a satisfactory manner. Who of us that had to get our meager bit of learning in life's bitter bumps, unaided by skillful teachers, are satisfied with our attainments? I know a lot of old fellows like myself who don't know much more than a mules' pap. I am meeting swarms of keen, bright, young men and women here at Austin that can go out into the various walks of life better prepared to do intelligent work at 22 than I am at 72. They have the edge on me by 50 years, a half a century. Why? Because of proper early education. Their possibilities for usefulness are greatly enhanced. They have tools with which to work. Dear Chief, tell your readers to educate their children.

Love to All to Club,
Old Man Heare and Chum.

JOIN THE COMERCIAL LEAGUE

While the League has a pretty large membership, still there are many other men in this town who ought to join and lend their support to a unit effort to get more and better things for Miami and its trade territory. One man can do little in this way, but all the men can do almost anything when yoked together for a concerted pull. Why are you not a member of the League? Do you not believe in co-operation? Have you no civic pride? What do you propose to be worth to your Community? Join the League and help push.

MIAMI COMMERCIAL LEAGUE ACTIVE

The Secretary of The Miami Commercial League is in correspondence with various persons who wish information about our town and country. Among others is a flour mill man who is looking for a location for a flour and meal mill. Of course we have the ideal location for this man and his business and the League will leave nothing undone to get them. Lack of capital for installing larger engine, a complete flour mill and other machinery is all that handicaps Mr. Kent who at present has charge of the old Christopher Mill here.

The League is glad to note the good street work now being done by our efficient street Commissioner C. H. Wilson. He has given the west end of Commercial street quite a different appearance. The ditching, grading and installation of culverts will go a long way towards solving the drainage problem of Commercial and Main Streets. It is the policy of Mr. Wilson to make each street take care of its drainage. The League is greatly interested devising means of getting better financial support for our street work. Mr. Wilson has always been handicapped by lack of money to defray the expenses of putting the street in good condition and maintaining them so.

J. R. Durrett,
Sec'y Miami Commercial League.

COMMERCIAL LEAGUE MEETING TUESDAY

President J. W. Voyles of the Miami Commercial League has called a special meeting of the League for Tuesday afternoon of next week, at 3 o'clock at the Pastime Theatre.

Several interesting and important subjects will be taken up at that time, and every member is urged to come, and also bring a new member with you. Our League is going big, and there are some good things in store for our next meeting, so be on hand.

FORDSON HITS HIGHEST PRODUCTION RECORD

On February 19th at 9 a. m. Fordson Tractor Number 100,000 left the assembly line in the Fordson Plant at Dearborn, Michigan, slightly less than two and one-half years after number one was completed. And here again has Henry Ford set a new high record in the manufacture of farm tractors via Quantity production route.

Although the Ford interests are very recent entrants in the ranks of the tractor manufacturers, yet Henry Ford really built a tractor of the steam type before he started work on his first gas car. And incidentally, that tractor and the first car, still in very good running condition, and Mr. Ford occasionally demonstrates both to visitors at his farm in Dearborn.

Some fifteen years ago Mr. Ford began work on what has come to be the Fordson. This tractor was really a Ford Car equipped with special wheels and included of course some mechanical changes. By 1908 he had a workable tractor; it plowed, harrowed, and did much other work on the farm. Then ensued nine more years of Experimental work before the first tractor was put on the market.

Fordson tractors are now being assembled at a rate of 350 daily at Dearborn, 100 at the St. Louis Assembling Plant, and it is estimated that within a short time the Des Moines Branch will be in operation. There is also an assembling plant in Cork, Ireland.

THE LATE BRO. WILLIAMS AN APPRECIATION

Dear Chief:

In last week's issue, we read the sad news of the death of Bro. L. C. Williams. There is not a citizen of Miami who has not felt influence of this grand man for good. His splendid Christian character stood at all times high and noble and worthy of our best efforts to emulate his high ideals in our lives. To him was given a rare jewel of attainment, a long life of daily Christian grace that evidently fitted him to be on the right side of every problem confronting him in his own life, and in the lives of those over whom he had influence.

Let us cherish his memory, and try to emulate the example of this grand man.

We note other calls that the reaper of death has made in our Miami community, and are reminded that death is no respecter of person, and his sure summons awaits us all. Will the surviving friends let the mantle of charity cover our faults and only try to emulate our virtues? Only thus can a higher, nobler, social fabric be built up to bless the earth.

L. C. Heare.

MARRIAGE SUNDAY

Mr. F. L. Brown of the Jones Drug Store, and Miss Beula M. Rhone teacher in the Public School, were married Sunday afternoon at the W. A. Dyer residence, Eld. F. B. Shephard officiating.

Mr. Brown came here a few weeks ago from Albany, and the Bride is from Rising Star, and their marriage is the result of a long acquaintance and courtship. Both are fine young people, and will be at home in Miami, and we join with friends in good wishes.

WHAT IS A BANK?

A bank is much more than merely a safe place to keep funds, for handling checks, for collecting drafts, etc.

A bank should be regarded as the intimate helper, adviser and friend of the customer; ever ready to cooperate in every proper way, to extend necessary accommodation as required, and to protect its interests in every way that lies in its power.

This is the kind of service that we endeavor to render; and we invite you to make your connection with us with such service in view.

"WE MUST GET THERE IN TIME TO SAVE HIM."

Synopsis.—Hilary Askew, a young American, inherits from an uncle a hundred square miles of forest in Quebec. Upon taking possession he discovers all sorts of queer things. Lamartine, his uncle's lawyer, tells him the property is comparatively worthless and tries to induce him to sell. Lafa Connell, the mill foreman, tells him his uncle has been systematically robbed. Morris, his manager, is associated with the Ste. Marie company, a rival concern owned by Brousseau, the "boss" of the region. Madeleine, the beautiful daughter of Seigneur Rosny, original owner of Askew's land, is pursued by Brousseau, who has her father in his power. The hero decides to stay and manage his property. He discharges Morris and makes Connell manager. He warns "Black" Pierre, foreman of a gang of Brousseau's men cutting on the way to the Ste. Lawrence. Who saved the boom? Baptiste of Askew's mill hands. Askew and Connell part in anger over the strike. Askew starts to stop Louis Duval from opening a saloon in Ste. Boniface. Madeleine asks him not to go. Askew breaks up the liquor selling and runs into a trap, where he fights four of his enemies.

Pierre reeled, and once again Hilary leaped and caught him under the chin. But this time he was not quick enough to repeat his former maneuver. Leblanc struck at him from behind. The upward thrust would have penetrated his heart had it struck where Leblanc intended; but, by a miracle of luck, it passed between Hilary's arm and his body, only just grazing a rib. The point of the blade caught in the lining of the coat and, before Leblanc could withdraw his arm, Hilary pressed his own left arm against his body, catching Leblanc's hand there and imprisoning it.

This movement swung him round, forcing him to release Pierre, and the ensuing bovine rush which the outlaw made threw them both against the embrasure of the second window, on the opposite side of the door. Men were yelling outside, and a furious hammering was maintained, but none of the fighters was conscious either of the shouts or of the blows. As Hilary and Leblanc fell against the window-sill the rattled wood broke inward. The second lamp tottered and then crashed down beside them, going out as the first had done, and leaving the stable in complete darkness. With a swift movement Hilary managed to draw Leblanc's arm further through his. With the pressure of his combined biceps and triceps he could hold it there indefinitely, if he had only Leblanc to contend with. But he could not use his right hand to force Leblanc's open and take the knife, which the jobber was making frantic efforts to use. He needed his right hand for Pierre; and Leblanc managed to twist the knife so that its edge was against Hilary's side, and with the sinews of his fingers he was scraping it backward and forward, ripping open the coat lining and inflicting a succession of scratches and little punctures under the heart.

Hilary backed suddenly, jarring Leblanc's spine against the edge of the window shelf. Leblanc groaned and made a frantic effort to twist himself free, hacking at Hilary's shins and shouting to Pierre to finish the job. Pierre's forward rush had flung him between the two. Hilary felt him groping in the darkness, trying to gauge the position in which he was leaning; Pierre was evidently puzzled by the position of the two, and by the termination of Leblanc's shoulder against Hilary's. Hilary sensed that Pierre had finally satisfied himself and had raised his right arm to strike. He flung away the revolver, which he still held, reached up and seized the hand as it was about to descend.

Thus holding the right wrist of each of his assailants he plunged forward, bringing them to the floor. He let go suddenly and sprang to his feet. Pierre's knife grazed his sole; as Leblanc tried to rise Hilary caught him beneath the chin with the other foot. Leblanc groaned and his head went back on the floor.

That left only Pierre in action. Hilary withdrew a step or two. He heard the outlaw breathing heavily as he crouched in the darkness. For the first time he began to be aware of the knocking at the door. It sounded now as if a crowbar were being applied. The yells of the lumbermen came to his ears; but the absurdity of his position did not dawn on him, nor the fact that when he had settled with Pierre he would have to reckon with the mob outside. He meant to deal with Pierre as he had dealt with the others. But in the darkness he could guide himself only by Pierre's breathing, which sounded now on one side of him and now on the other. Further away Leblanc was moaning.

Out of the darkness Pierre leaped forward. The knife blow flashed past Hilary, who got Pierre by the arms. They began to wrestle as they had done that day in the woods. Here Pierre was Hilary's superior; his physical strength was greater, though he had no force in his blows; and, though Hilary had beaten him that day at the camp, it was by a stratagem which could not be repeated successfully. Gradually the strength of Pierre's arms began to tell. The two struggled together, but Pierre winning. The knife arm was surely slipping out of Hilary's clutch. It reached upward. But at the moment when it was evading Hilary's dropped Pierre's left hand and struck the outlaw between the eyes. As he did so he heard the breathing on the other side of him.

Pierre staggered, and in a flash Hilary had both his hands upon Pierre's right wrist, kneading the veins and sinews till the fist opened. The knife clattered upon the floor. Hilary stooped and seized it.

That was the precise instant when the knife that had been dropped by Louis Duval, wielded by Simeon and thrust upward, found its home beneath Hilary's shoulder.

Hilary, who was still bending forward, stumbled and pitched upon the floor and lay there.

CHAPTER X.

Unexpected Allies.

Lafa Connell, at Monsieur Tremblay's hotel, stretched out his legs upon a chair and puffed vigorously at his pipe, while Monsieur Tremblay leaned against the wall and listened to his guest's semi-soliloquy.

"Yep, Tremblay, I'm through now," Lafa was saying. "I'm through for good, and I'm going to wait here till the boat comes tomorrow and then beat it for Shoeburypoot. Lord, I'll be glad to see Clarice—my wife—and the kids again."

"I've put up a good fight, Tremblay. I've dropped eight thousand dollars in this fool game, and Clarice and me will have to start buying our home again when I get back to Shoeburypoot, and maybe I won't hear nothing about it, neither. But when it's a case of throwing away a few thousand dollars' worth of lumber, just because you look upon a strike as a personal offense, and me losing my home, I've finished. I've come to the end. The end—finish—no more. You understand me, Tremblay. I'm going to leave him to his fate," continued Lafa, trying to draw a few more cigarettes of tobacco smoke from his burned-out plug. "It's his fault."

He shook his pipe out angrily. "Oul," said Tremblay; and the word conveyed any significance that its hearer might choose to put upon it. "Oul," he continued thoughtfully, though what he was thinking about was incomprehensible.

"It ain't my job," Lafa pursued. "I'm a family man. I got my wife and kids to think about, and I'm against preparedness. It ain't reasonable to hire a man for manager and then expect him to go round saloon-busting, is it, Tremblay?"

"Oul," answered Tremblay. "You're right," said Lafa. "Of course it ain't." He filled his pipe again, lit and puffed at it. "I don't know what in thunder's wrong with this tobacco tonight," he said, and emptied it. He crossed his right leg over his left, uncrossed them, and then crossed his left over his right. Then he got up.

"I guess I'll take a stroll on the road and see if the stars are out," he said. Lafa's stroll was a rapid one. As soon as he had left the porch he almost ran up the hill road toward the cliff. As he panted toward the summit he heard the rumble of wheels in the distance, and presently he saw the cure's rig coming toward him. He halted.

"Say, Father Lucy, d'you mind giving me a lift into St. Boniface?" he called.

The rig stopped and Lafa perceived Madeleine Rosny seated at the cure's side. Her hands were clasped, her face agitated and deathly pale. Lafa's face lit up as he saw the cure's rig coming toward him. He halted.

"Jump in, Mr. Lafa," said the cure. "I'm glad that we met. We need you. We are going to St. Boniface. Jump in and I shall tell you on the way."

Lafa entered the buggy, and Father Lucy urged on the horse; then he turned and said:

"Louis Duval has opened a saloon in Baptiste's old house, and Monsieur Askew has gone to stop him."

"I guessed so, Father Lucy," answered Lafa. "I was just on my way there, in case there was going to be trouble. I guess there isn't likely to be, though. Mr. Askew knows how to take care of himself."

"Trouble?" questioned the cure, sharply. "They are going to murder him."

"I heard some yarn like that from Tremblay," said Lafa, "but I guessed that was all talk."

"It was not talk. It is their plan," said Father Lucy. "Mademoiselle Rosny heard of it from Monsieur Brousseau days ago—it was on the day when you went to Ste. Marie. He rode with her toward Ste. Marie and told her so. She did not believe him. This afternoon she learned of it again from little Baptiste, who asked her to warn Monsieur Askew. Everybody knew he would go alone to St. Boniface to stop the sale of liquor. Mademoiselle Rosny rode up to the camp to warn Monsieur Askew, as Baptiste had begged her. He would not listen to her. She came to me. It is a devil's plot," he said sternly, "and if they hurt one hair of his head they shall go to prison for it."

"We must get there in time to save him. You will do all you can to save him, will you not, Mr. Connell?" asked the girl, looking earnestly at Lafa. As their eyes met Lafa realized suddenly that her agitation had more than an impersonal cause behind it. The swift knowledge came home to him with a shock; it cleared up many things, among them the fogs of rancor that had clouded his mind.

"I'll do everything that's in my power, Mademoiselle," he said. "I'll stand by him—I'll fight for him if there's any fighting—"

"There will be none," said Father Lucy. "But Mademoiselle Rosny understands now what Brousseau is. She knows his character and his evil mind. And she has learned, fortunately, before it is too late."

Not another word was spoken. The buggy descended the hill and rolled toward St. Boniface. As it crossed the rickety bridge they heard the sound of distant shouting in Duval's saloon. About the front of it was gathered the entire male population of St. Boniface, gesticulating and chattering.

They fell back in dismay as the cure leaped from the buggy and assisted Mademoiselle Rosny down. Lafa followed. He tried to urge the girl to remain in the rig, but she paid no attention to him. She listened with anxious intendment as the cure addressed the crowd, her lips compressed, her bosom rising and falling quickly. All eyes were fixed on Father Lucy, but each, as the priest turned to him, tried to shrink back behind his neighbor.

They were pointing inside the saloon. The cure hurried through the doorway, Mademoiselle Rosny immediately behind him, and Lafa following them. The saloon, though lit by an oil lamp, was empty, as seemed to be the dark stable beyond it, seen through the open doorway.

Father Lucy snatched down the lamp and carried it hastily toward the stable door. He raised it and looked in, then turned and tried to bar Madeleine from entering. But she pushed past him, saw, cried, wrung her hands, and ran into the middle space between the rows of stalls. Lafa, following her, saw her seated upon the floor, and Hilary, covered with blood, lying on his forehead, as if his assailants, after stabbing him, had kicked him.

Father Lucy half turned him over and, uttering an exclamation, pointed to the shoulder, from which fresh blood was slowly welling. Lafa saw that Hilary was alive; he breathed very faintly, but his face was the color of death, more bloodless than that of Madeleine. The cure began cutting away the coat, then the lining, which would not come with it; then the shirt. He looked up.

"Bring some water," he said.

Lafa hurried out, the few curious lumbermen scattering in panic and scurrying before him. As he stood among them, shouting, a window in a nearby house went up, and a woman leaped out a pail, three parts full. Lafa took it. As he re-entered the shanty the crowd slowly gathered behind him again. He hurried into the stable. The cure took a strip of the girl's petticoat, dipped it in the pail and began to cleanse the wound, pursing his lips and shaking his head the while. Lafa could see that the wound, while not long, was terribly deep, and it was still bleeding. It was impossible to do more than clean it superficially, owing to the need for haste. Having done this, Father Lucy made a pad and placed it in position, while Madeleine, working with steady fingers which gave her the lie to her face, began to wind the strips over it round the chest. All the while she worked her face was agitated, and yet composed, and only the tortured eyes betrayed what she was suffering; but when the wound was bound she broke down.

"It is my fault," she cried in French, sobbing despairingly. "I warned him and he would not hear me, and I rode away. I knew it long before and I would not believe it. I have killed him."

The cure's hand fell on her shoulder. Lafa noticed, too, and thought it significant afterward that, wild though her words were, and untrue, he did not then deny them.

Mademoiselle looked up and, meeting his eyes, grew calm. Lafa stepped forward, bent down and gently raised Hilary's head from her knee. He placed his hands beneath the shoulders, supporting them, while Father Lucy lifted the lower part of the body, and thus they carried the stricken man through the shanty toward the buggy.

The cure made a motion to Lafa to enter. "You and Mademoiselle Rosny will drive to my house," he said. "As there is no room for me, I walk. I give you the key, because my housekeeper is gone to bed and must not be frightened."

"No, to the Chateau," said Madeleine Rosny. "Do you think he shall go anywhere else, monsieur, when he is like this?"

Her voice rang proudly, the tone admitted of no opposition. The cure was silent.

Lafa drew Hilary into the bottom of the buggy and crouched there, supporting the head and the upper part of his body. But Madeleine, watchful, uttered a low cry. A little blood was leaking through the bandage. She hastened to the other side of the rig and began adjusting it, while the cure looked on in panicky silence, broken only by low words and mutterings.

"This is a bad night's work that you have done," he cried. "You shall pay for it, every man here, and the assassins too. I know them all."

The man who stepped forward was the foreman of the mill, by name MacPherson, a decent workman and a descendant of one of Wolfe's Highlanders who had settled along the coast and perpetuated their names and something of their stanch character, if nothing else of their race survived. "I am not all guilty, Monsieur Tessier," he said. "I knew nothing of this until the deed was done, or I should have used every effort to prevent it. These people asked me to speak for them. They say that they broke down the stable door and saved his life when he was about to be cut to pieces."

"His life!" cried Father Lucy, scornfully. "His life hangs by a thread; and if he dies his murderers shall hang for it. And you are guilty equally," he continued, addressing the crowd, which seemed to melt under his burning tones. "You left him lie there and bleed to death. And listen further. You think that Monsieur Askew brought the revenue officers to Ste. Marie. Do I not hate Ste. Marie more than he? Yet even I would not bring the officers here until I had used every means to clean up the evil there. It was Monsieur Morris who brought them, for he told me so."

There was a sensation at the priest's words. An excited bubble broke out. Madeleine, who had just completed the bandaging, halted with one foot upon the step of the buggy and turned to the lumbermen.

"Yes, you left him to die!" she cried in scorn. "You were afraid, and you forgot that strangers who come upon our land, upon our soil, are under our protection." Her eyes blazed as she denounced them. "You have forgotten your ancient loyalty in these days, Messieurs. You have no memory of your Seigneur and what you owe to him—still your Seigneur, although you no longer grind and hew for him! You have forgotten!"

There was another movement among the crowd. Her words seemed to stir them even more than the priest's had done. "No, no, mademoiselle!" cried several voices. "No! We have not forgotten!"

MacPherson came forward again. "They thought," he said, "Mademoiselle, that Monsieur Brousseau's enemies were yours."

Lafa saw the girl stagger as if she had received a blow. She put her hand upon the buggy wheel and leaned forward for a moment, staring into MacPherson's face. Then, without a word, she stepped in, took up the reins and began to urge the horse, very slowly, along the road. The cure came to the side of the vehicle.

"I shall come to the Chateau, then, Mademoiselle Rosny," he said.

Mademoiselle did not answer him. Presently Lafa, crouching in the bottom of the buggy, heard her sobbing again, low, heartbroken sobs that she could not check for a long time. Sometimes she took her eyes from the road to look for a moment into Hilary's face, and once she stopped for a moment.

"How is he?" she asked.

"He is living, Mademoiselle," said Lafa. And that was all he dared to say.

There was no lantern, and Madeleine needed all her watchfulness to avoid the stones and ruts in the road. Luckily the moon was bright and the horse steady. Once, as the buggy swung round a bend, Lafa, looking out, saw the cure trudging behind, shaking his heavy stick. He heard Madeleine still sobbing. His own heart was heavy enough; he blamed himself for Hilary's misfortune. He should have stood by him. And he had meant to do so. But he had not calculated that Hilary would walk so fast or go to St. Boniface so soon.

The trees fell away, disclosing the Rosny chateau. The buggy stopped before the door in front of which the Seigneur and the old retainer were standing, with anxious faces. Madeleine bent swiftly over Hilary and raised his limp hand; then she turned her eyes to Lafa's, mutely asking him that question which could not be spoken.

"He is no worse," said Lafa.

The Seigneur and his man came toward them. "MacPherson telephoned to the post office and they brought me the news," he said. "You did quite right, Madeleine. Gently, now, Monsieur," he added, addressing Connell, and together they raised Hilary from the buggy floor. "Remember the steps. Now, I will go backward—so."

They were inside the Chateau, carrying their burden between the rows of portraits into a room which had been a drawing room in bygone days, furnished with spindle-legged furniture, gilt mirrors and ormolu cabinets. A bed in a corner showed that its use had been converted, probably because the upper part of the Chateau was no longer habitable.

Mademoiselle Rosny came in with her arms full of bed linen, diffusing the scent of wintergreen. Lafa and her father got Hilary to bed. He was stirring now, beginning to toss his arms and mutter in delirium. The pulse was stronger, but the flush which had supplanted the pallor denoted fever. Presently the cure entered and went straight to the bedside. The three men looked at Hilary and at each other.

"I have seen men who were wounded worse recover," said Edmond Rosny. "He has bled much, but the heart is uninjured, and unless the lung is gravely hurt . . . well, we shall see to it that he gets well," he ended abruptly.

There was nothing more Connell could do. He would have stayed, but he felt that he must await the issue in patience. Madeleine was already established at Hilary's bedside.

Lafa went in softly. "I shall come early in the morning, Mademoiselle Rosny," he said. "I want to say—about what you said to Father Lucy tonight—I mean it was my fault. I guess I'm the only one to blame. I ought to have stood by him, and I went away. You did more than me, mademoiselle, and it wasn't up to you. I mean, it wasn't your business to save him."

"No?" whispered Madeleine, raising her eyes to his. And Lafa felt like a blundering fool.

"You'll save him," he said. "We can't lose him. We want him—we all want him. I guess I didn't realize how white he got when—

He was half way to his boarding-house before he stopped as a thought struck him.

"I guess Father Lucy does get results in his own way," he said.

CHAPTER XI.

Dreams and Dangers.

Thanks to a constitution inured by hard work and healthy living, Hilary improved rapidly under Madeleine's nursing, aided by her father's skilled treatment of the wound. On the second day Hilary was conscious, on the fourth Rosny announced that the crisis was past; upon the ninth the patient was sitting up in bed and demanding solid food.

Lafa was the happiest man in the world when, at last admitted to the bedside, he asked and received absolution for his desertion.

"Now I've got some good news," he said, when Hilary persisted in asking about the work. "We've got that shipment off, and Dupont will have both vessels back in a few days for the next. The mill's working overtime and the gang's back on the job."

"You paid them two dollars?"

"Not a cent more," said Lafa triumphantly. "They asked to go back to work, and you ought to see them working! I guess they feel that they haven't given you a square deal, and Mr. Rosny's been having a few words with them, I hear. Anyway, they know now it's Morris who tipped off the revenue people, in order to take trouble for you, and the result is this part of the country has grown too hot for him. So he's gone away. I hear he had a quarrel with Brousseau over the share of their plunder, and they almost came to blows over it. Well, that's the first of the gang out. And MacPherson has turned out a trump, working overtime and making the hands work, and it begins to look to me as if we'll win out after all."

This was good news. It was now September, and in little more than a month the snow should extend considerably their cutting area.

So they discussed their plans, until Madeleine, coming in, drove Connell away. Hilary would not ask him about his assailants, and Lafa was glad to avoid the subject. It was Father Lucy who took it up later, when Hilary was convalescent.

He hummed and hawed a good deal, and finally the truth came out. It would be easy enough to get the police up from Quebec, but the quartette would have to be laid by the heels before the advent of winter made further action impossible for months. Of the four, Pierre had disappeared. Leblanc was said to have gone into the woods for the winter to trap, having apparently abandoned his pretense of a sub-lease on the Ste. Marie limits. Simeon Duval was running his saloon wide open, and swearing that Hilary having assaulted him, he had struck with his knife in self-defense, while in a half-runned condition. Little Louis, his brother, scared out of his wits, had been to see the cure with a view to making his peace.

Hilary had no desire to punish Louis any further, though he meant to deal with Pierre and Leblanc when the opportunity arose. He meant to rid the community of them and Simeon; but he had a strong man's reluctance to call upon the law to avenge a physical assault. In the end the cure went away with the understanding that Louis was forgiven, and with no decision taken as to further action.

"But what strength! What power, monsieur!" he said admiringly, clenching his hand over the muscles of Hilary's arm. "Do you know, monsieur," he continued thoughtfully, "I have often thought that a priest in such a district as this needs the muscularity almost as much as the good ness! Ah, Monsieur Askew, if I were your age, and of your strength, what would I not do?"

To Hilary his convalescence was a forest of paradise. Edmond Rosny came in only for formal visits now, twice or three times a day; but it was wonderful to see Madeleine, whom he knew that he loved with all his heart, about his bedside all day long, and then about his chair, waiting on him, anticipating his wishes, until he felt ashamed to be so helpless, her pride gone, her scorn gone, her enmity as well. When Hilary learned of the part that she had played in his rescue, and thanked her gratefully, she could not meet his eyes.

Then came the first day on which he was permitted to leave his room. Leaning on Madeleine's arm, he had gone out to feel the wonder of the sunshine and the crisp autumn air. The garden had originally been laid out in imitation of the formal gardens of France of the period, with terraces and statuary. Everything was in ruin; and yet Hilary had the sudden, inexplicable sense of having come home.

"Mademoiselle Rosny," he said, "we are going to be good friends in future, aren't we? The good-will goes with your kindness, even if it does not go with the trees."

"It's hard to keep a good man down."

G. M. MOON

A BIG ENDORSEMENT FOR THE HARVESTER-THRASHER

Plainview, Texas, March 6, 1920
International Harvester Co.
Amarillo, Texas.
Gentlemen:

As per your request of Jan. 19 sent from your Chicago office, I can say that with my experience with your Harvester and Thresher machines last season, I favor the Harvester and Thresher away above the usual method of handling our wheat crop.

Last season I had 420 acres of wheat of which I cut 120 acres with a McCormick 12-foot binder, putting the same with a 16-20 tractor. That field cost me $10.75 per acre, that included of course the cutting, twine and threshing by the independent crew, at 25 cents a bushel and using two of my regular hands at $20 per month and board made the total expense of the field as mentioned above, $10.20 per acre.

The balance of 320 acres I cut with your Harvester and Thresher, running two crews, two men each, commencing at 8 a. m. and quitting at 2 a. m., they averaged 25 acres a day.
I allowed my men $7.50 per day, calculated their board and figured the fuel and lubricating oil, keeping strict accounts, I figured $1.77 per acre, the wheat delivered to the mill.

I can further state that we were not tied up 10 minutes at any time during the entire season and I am satisfied that the machine is ready to go back to work this harvest without a dollar's cost for repairs. I had careful mechanics of the machine and splendid service at all times from Jarvis & Barber your agents at Plainview.

Afterwards I sold the machine for the same dollars that I gave for it and have ordered another for the coming season.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) E. DOWDEN

Dizzy's Rap at His Old Foe.

Israel's unpublished novel will be read with eager interest by all who care to learn his view of his great rival, Gladstone, who is therein portrayed as Joseph Topindy Falconet. In denying him any sense of humor the novelist does not exceed the privileges of poetic license, for certainly his model was always in grim, serious earnest. In declaring, however, that he was never seen to smile Davidoff somewhat maliciously exaggerates, for Gladstone's smile was not infrequent, and was among his many personal charms. But it must be remembered that the novel was written when the two statesmen had long been settled and unrelenting foes, and Dizzy was a good hater.—London Chronicle.

Beyond Doubt.

The class in business organization at the Arsenal technical schools was listing the essentials of production, which included management. D. C. Morgan, teacher, defined the meaning of the word and cited examples of "good managers." To illustrate a poor manager, he asked: "What would you call a cook who put one cup of sugar and forty-eight eggs in a cake?" "I should call her a rich woman," answered one pupil instantly.

LIVE STOCK

BANK BOOSTS BETTER SIRES

Anxious to Assist Campaign in Every Way Possible—Offers to Finance Any Stockman.

The better sires campaign is attracting active attention on the Pacific coast. Recently the United States department of agriculture received a letter from a bank at Bend, Ore., containing the following statements:

"We are anxious to assist this campaign in every way possible and have been conducting a live stock improvement campaign for some time. This bank has brought in 15 registered beef bulls since March 1, and we are now arranging for a carload of stockmen to go to the Pacific International at Portland. We have offered to finance any stockman in the county who wishes to purchase pure-bred sires while at the stock show. We wish to link up with your organization in this campaign in every way possible." The department of agriculture is ready to enroll in the campaign any live stock owner who fills out the proscribed blank and has it properly certified as described in literature now being distributed. The listing of dominant breeds by counties, too, is attracting attention and counties interested in that phase of the campaign may be enrolled at any time.

STAND BY PRESENT 'T B' PLAN

Live Stock Associations Decide to Take No Steps to Lower Standard Now in Vogue.

After two years of practical operation of the tuberculosis-free accredited herd plan, a joint committee representing the pure-bred cattle associations and the United States Live Stock Sanitary association has unanimously decided that no steps should be taken to lower the high standard of the present plan.

It was decided that no herd should be accredited if it contains a tubercular animal, male or female. It was agreed by the joint committee, to show that owners are exerting an effort to exterminate the disease, that a supplementary list be made to the accredited herd list to contain the names of the owners of pure-bred herds that are free from tuberculosis on two annual tests but, in which the herd bull reacts. Such a herd will not receive an accredited herd certificate. The reacting bull may be used under certain conditions. The accredited herd plan is administered by the bureau of animal industry, United States department of agriculture, in co-operation with the states.

STEERS FATTENED ON SILAGE

Interesting Feeding Test With Shelled Corn Conducted at Missouri Station.

At the Missouri experiment station one lot of steers was fed 15 pounds of shelled corn per head per day along with 2.5 pounds of linseed oil cake, 2.9 pounds of clover hay, and 25 pounds of corn silage. Another lot received no shelled corn but a little more of the oil cake and clover and 40 pounds of silage per head per day. The results were that the lot that received shelled corn and half a feed of silage charged $15.95 for 100 pounds gain, while the other lot charged only $10.69. The cost of feed per steer on shelled corn was $50.23, while with the other lot it was $21.17.

WATER SUPPLY FOR CALVES

Common Idea That Young Animals Will Drink Too Much is Error—They Also Like Salt.

Let the calves have free access to fresh and clean water, and also to salt. The common idea that calves will drink too much water is a mistake. During the first four months little calves should not eat too much grain.

GOATS ADAPTED TO GRAZING

Animals Are Economical Producers Under Anything Like Ordinary Farm Conditions.

Angora goats are economical producers under anything like ordinary farm conditions. They are well adapted to grazing and can be maintained on rather thin pasture. Yet this is not desirable as a food.

PNEUMONIA LEFT BOY WEAK AND SICKLY

Parents Were Almost Hopeless, But He Is Now Well and Strong.

"Our little boy's health was so poor we were afraid we were going to lose him. He is ten years old, and has had weak lungs ever since he was eight months old, caused by pneumonia. We have been very careful with him and doctored him continually, but we had almost despaired of ever having a strong, well boy."

"But since giving him Milks Emulsion all his trouble is gone and he is in perfect health."—Mrs. G. W. Smiley, 20 Maple St., Dayton, O.

For restoring appetite, health and strength in sickly children, mothers will find Milks Emulsion the thing they have always sought. Most children like to take it, because unlike many emulsions and tonics, it really tastes good. Milks Emulsion is a pleasant, nutritive food and a corrective medicine. It restores healthy, natural bowel action, doing away with all need of pills and purgatives. It promotes appetite and quickly puts the digestive organs in shape to assimilate food. As a builder of flesh and strength Milks Emulsion is strongly recommended to those whom sickness has weakened, and is a powerful aid in resisting and repairing the effects of wasting diseases. Chronic stomach trouble and constipation are promptly relieved—usually in one day.

This is the only solid emulsion made, and so palatable that it is eaten with a spoon like ice cream.

No matter how severe your case you are urged to try Milks Emulsion under this guarantee—Take six bottles (one with you, use it according to directions, and if not satisfied with the results your money will be promptly refunded. Price $10 and $20 per bottle. The Milks Emulsion Co., Terre Haute, Ind. Sold by druggists everywhere—Adv.

A Feeling of Security

You naturally feel secure when you know that the medicine you are about to take is absolutely pure and contains no harmful or habit producing drugs.

Such a medicine is Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, kidney, liver and bladder remedy. The same standard of purity, strength and excellence is maintained in every bottle of Swamp-Root.

It is scientifically compounded from vegetable herbs. It is not a stimulant and is taken in teaspoonful doses. It is not recommended for everything. It is nature's great helper in relieving and overcoming kidney, liver and bladder troubles.

A sworn statement of purity is with every bottle of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root.

If you need a medicine, you should have the best. On sale at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes, medium and large.

However, if you wish first to try this great preparation send ten cents to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing be sure and mention this paper.—Adv.

Record in Dry-Docking.

A world's record in dry-docking achievement was established recently by the 30,000-ton floating dry dock of the Morse Dry Dock and Repair company of Brooklyn, N. Y., when the S. S. Minnesota, the largest cargo carrier afloat, was lifted in 25 minutes actual pumping time.

ROAD BUILDING

RAILROADS AND GOOD ROADS

Solution of Future Transportation Problems Seen in Hard-Surfaced Highways of Country.

Any student of the railroad situation must reach the conclusion that railroad operation in America has reached the height of its efficiency and hereafter it will remain stationary or decrease.

It is always possible that some revolutionary process will be discovered, but the long years without marked improvement of process indicate that railroad mechanics have about reached their maximum while bureaucratic and political control now assured will be as deadening to all mechanical improvement as they will be to effective management.

Progress in transportation, therefore, must be in other lines. Navigation has been heralded for some years as a solution, but in spite of heavy government assistance, water traffic, even on the Great Lakes, has steadily declined. The remedy does not appear to rest there, at least for the present.

There remain the highroads. In their salvation lies, says Chicago Tribune. The war, which proved the utter incapacity of the French government-owned railways to rise to the emergency, established the motor truck in its full majesty. What the French railroads could not do the motor trucks on fine French highways did. What the highroads are in France they must be made in America.

Fortunately, we have an excellent little beginning in the middle West. The principle of hard roads has been accepted and timid beginnings have been made in a number of states, chief among them Illinois. Let us understand, and immediately, that what has been done and what has been legislated for is merely the thin entering wedge of our highroad program. The narrow ribbons of concrete roads laid out by legislation will no more carry the forthcoming auto truck traffic than the old narrow gauge single track railroads were able to carry the railroad traffic which they caused to develop.

It is fortunate that we have many agencies building roads. The nation will do something for the most backward. The states, however, should treble or quadruple all national allowances. In the beginning, and until the principles of highroad traffic are generally understood, it will probably be necessary for counties and even cities to provide the wide thoroughfares necessary at the points where traffic centers.

To illustrate, the 18-foot roads which are perhaps adequate a hundred miles in the country are even now more congested ten miles out from the city limits than are our most crowded city streets.

BILLION DOLLARS FOR ROADS

Immense Amount to Be Spent in 1920 for Construction and Proper Maintenance.

More than $1,000,000,000 will be spent this year in construction and maintenance of roads and streets throughout the United States, F. L. Powers, secretary of the American Road Builders' association, estimated.

HINDER SOCIAL INTERCOURSE

Suspension of Travel Caused by Poor Condition of Highways in Rural Communities.

Bad roads are often a handicap to social intercourse. Under the worst road conditions all travel may be completely suspended. It is not difficult to see such conditions, but what is more difficult is to comprehend the general improved social atmosphere which adequately improved road conditions cause in rural communities.

HUNT'S LIGHTNING

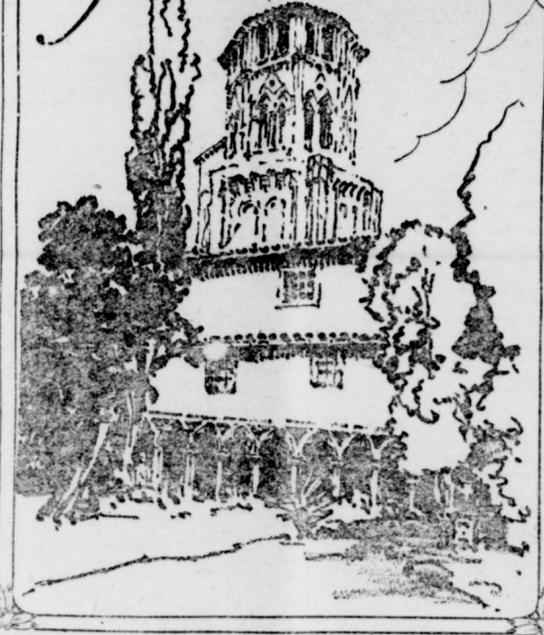

This Medicine Recommended by a Doctor

DR. J. H. WAGNER

When a doctor uses a medicine himself besides prescribing it to his patients, he must know that it has merit. This is what Dr. J. H. Wagner, a prominent physician of Skate, Kentucky, has to say about Dr. Hartman's well-known remedy, PE-RU-NA: "I have used PE-RU-NA myself for catarrh and have given it to others for catarrh, bloating after eating and other ailments. It has proved a success in all cases with old and young men and women. All speak well of PE-RU-NA. It is the best of all tonics." Dr. Wagner, out of the fullness of his own personal experience, for the good of all sick and suffering, recommends a medicine which he knows to be good. You may be sure a doctor would not endanger his professional reputation by endorsing PE-RU-NA unless satisfied beyond a doubt of its value. Whether your trouble be a cough or a cold, or more subtle catarrhal affection of the stomach, bowels or other organs, give PE-RU-NA a trial. The immediate improvement which you will see will satisfy beyond a doubt that PE-RU-NA is what you need. PE-RU-NA may be purchased anywhere in tablet or liquid form.

OUT O' LUCK

Never mind! Just take Cascarets if Bilious, Constipated

Everyone must occasionally give to the bowels some regular help or else suffer from constipation, bilious attacks, stomach disorders and sick headache. But do not whip the bowels into activity with harsh cathartics.

What the liver and bowels need is a gentle and natural tonic, one that can constantly be used without harm. The gentlest liver and bowel tonic is "Cascarets." They put the liver to work and cleanse the colon and bowels of all waste, toxins and poisons without griping—they never sicken or inconvenience you like Calomel, Salts, Oil or Purgatives. Twenty-five million boxes of Cascarets are sold each year. They work while you sleep. Cascarets cost so little too.—Adv.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and 1/4 oz. of glycerine. Apply to the hair twice a week until it becomes the desired shade. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and will make harsh hair soft and glossy. It will not clog or soil the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off.—Adv.

BEAR CUBS PROBABLY UNIQUE

New Species the Result of Mating Canadian Black and Russian Brown, in London Zoo.

A "marriage was arranged" in London some time ago between Teddy, the black bear from Canada, and Daisy, the brown bear from Russia. The result is the first hybrid black-brown bear cubs ever born in the zoo—they may even be unique, for nature let alone produces no hybrids. They are a rich mahogany compromise between their parents' colorings, and are doing splendidly. Along with the news comes word that the ugliest beast in the world, the Matamora turtle, another emigrant from the new world, has been on a hunger strike ever since his arrival in London. At home he gets his food in a nasty, treacherous way. He has a shell which looks like a lump of rock on which weed grows freely. He keeps quiet and rests under. Round his jaws are a number of long lumps which look like desirable worms. These are his ground bait, and even if the Matamora be asleep a nibble rouses him to snap up a meal.

Cathedral of St. Sernin. As usual in churches hereabouts, the building is dark, being lighted by windows behind the triforium, and not from a clerestory above. The Romanesque manner did not relieve its main walls by distributing part of the weight along flying buttresses to the aisles; therefore it dared not build them very high, nor weaken them by piercing large windows. Toulouseais congregations, however, never cared for much light within their churches. There was already more than enough without.

Very interesting was my walk round the church, with the sacristan beside me, a handsome, kindly man, gentle and courteous, yet with a certain dignity in his manner, as of one who, though in a humble station, knew well how to command. I liked the quiet firmness with which he rebuked the old women who would chatter too loudly in the transport.

As we did the round of the church we talked together. He told me how deeply he cared for knowledge and learning, how much he regretted that such things meant so little to so many people of his country. "They are lizards who love to lie in the sun; and it is the sun we must blame"—he smiled at his jest—"if my fellow-townsmen are neither savants nor workers, and are too idle to follow up the idea that their minds seize upon so quickly. That is why when we have energy we do so well. I say often that some of our best presidents have come—Mr. Fallieres among them—from the left bank of the Garonne." And with a bow the sacristan left me to continue "my studies." He was the most eloquent of the many who have deplored to me the meridional disinclination to hard work. There is a proverb extant: "The men of the Midi use what the men of the north produce." The men of the north, I suppose, produced that proverb.

Houses are Fascinating. After the churches—perhaps even before the churches—her renaissance hotels are the greatest charm of Toulouse. And by "hotels" I mean houses, not hostels. Certainly they are most fascinating, both as specimens of architecture of their time, and as affording an idea of the magnificence in which the merchant princes of that day lived. Almost all styles of renaissance are to be seen, from that of the Hotel Bernuy—transitional from Gothic to the lightest and most graceful designs of the new manner—to the Hotel d'Assent, when the architects had already lost some of the first pure enthusiasm with which they viewed Italian art in the days of Francis I, and onward into the less refined, though rich and luxuriant style of the Maison de Pierre, built in the days of Louis XIII.

The Hotel de Vieux Raisin, I think, gave me the greatest pleasure, so perfectly felicitous it is, as seen from the courtyard. The little loggia, daintily decorated, the windows all variously adorned, and showing upon every sill, plaster, and headstone, a new device of scroll, garland, or festoon. Here two maidens, bearing proudly and gladly their light lintel border; here full-cheeked, soft-winged cherubs who have fluttered down, to rest awhile in these pleasant places. Beside them are baskets of fruit, hanging bunches of grapes and wreaths of flowers—ball and exquisite little fancies, carved like love-lyrics that nymphs of the fountain write with milk-white fingers upon the walls of their water-grottoes. Elsewhere leaf-words are written in leaves so naturelike as almost to tremble in the breeze, and to keep the courtyard fresh and cool beneath the torrid southern sun. Everywhere you will find in Toulouse, set down in stone among her palaces, such airy gossamer trifles as Joachim de Bellay and Remy de Belleure were fashioning, during those same years, in song.

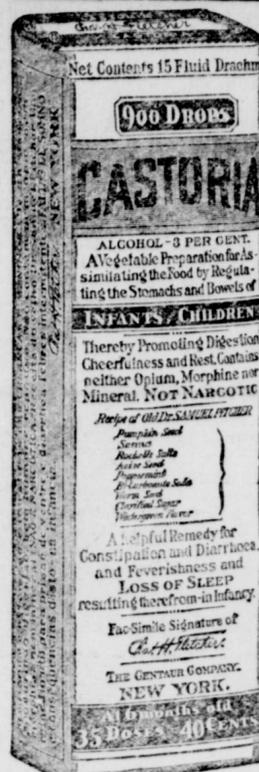

Sitting here I can look out upon the Place Lafayette, where—because it is raining heavily—the cabmen sit, hunched upon the boxes of their blue cabs with bright red wheels. With heads sunk down into their shoulders, like the anthropophagi of Othello's story, these Jehus of Toulouse sleep the idle hours away. One of them has spread a great faded blue umbrella so far over himself and over his box that only his feet are visible. Those feet recall Tweedledum—or Tweedledee, was it—sheltering from the storm. But there will be no need for long shelter here. Before an hour has passed the sun will be warm again upon the shining pave.

MONEY MADE IN ODD IDEAS Practically No Limit to Inventions That Have Been Granted Patents in United States.

In enumerating some of the strange patents sanctioned by the patent office an attorney mentions a tornado-proof house, the invention of a New England man. It is built on a pivot so that every breeze turns it with its head to the wind. Among other inventions is a "pedal calorificator," with which one can blow upon one's toes to warm them. It is a tube, worn under the clothes, with a branch leading to each foot and a mouthpiece at the top. Then there are a polisher for false teeth—merely the end of a corncob stuck on a stick; a sanitary pocket for carrying chewing gum, a wooden bit for preventing snoring, a noiseless alarm clock that yanks the sleeper's arm instead of ringing, another that starts a mechanism that throws him out of bed, and a machine for counting eggs as they are laid.

Very likely some of them may once have been silly, and some naughty, but they do not show it, while all the goodness and wisdom of their youth has grown upon them. Write W. D. Howells in Harper's Magazine. She was of the finest modernity in her love of the best things in literature and life, and could no more err in taste than in truth or the beauty which is one with it. She is gone now, who was so lately here in such perfection of mind and soul, that it seems as if she could never have left us who were privileged to share the bounty of her wisdom and grace.

A Morning Dish of Grape-Nuts certainly does hearten one up for the day. Why shouldn't it? Grape-Nuts is ready-cooked, ready-sweetened, and contains just those good elements nature requires for the strength to do things. Make Grape-Nuts your home cereal "There's a Reason"

How Six Hundred Children Live Together in One Big Family.

By Coleman Craig

The largest orphanage in the United States is in Texas, located seven miles out from Dallas, and is known as the Buckner Orphans Home. This institution has an interesting history. It was founded by the late R. C. Buckner in 1879.

Began with Three Children

This home, which now takes care of six hundred children, began with just three children, in a rented cottage in Dallas. In 1881 the first building was erected. From this small beginning the institution has had a marvelous growth, and during its history has taken care of many thousand children. There are now four large buildings, several cottages and 1890 acres of land. During all its history, it has been non-sectarian in its ministrations, and children have been admitted regardless of creed, though it is under the control of the Baptist General Convention of Texas.

A City Within Itself.

A visitor to the Buckner Orphans Home is impressed with the manner of inmates. With this in view, architects were called in, and work is now going forward in remodeling the old buildings, and in the planning of new ones, which will take care of the children in groups of thirty each instead of caring for them as a single unit of six hundred. The present buildings are now being remodeled so that each unit of thirty children will have its own apartment, with private bath and toilet. Each child will have a wardrobe where he may keep his own personal effects. Each unit will have a cozy little sitting room, tastefully furnished, and with artistic pictures and decorations. The units will each have a junior matron, who will be under the direction of the senior matron. By departmentizing and caring for the children in small groups, a long step will be taken in getting away from the institutional idea, which always exists where a large number are cared for under one management.

In further carrying out this idea, the new buildings that are to be erected out of funds provided in the Baptist 75 Million Drive, will not be large dormitories caring for several hundred, but will be cottages with a capacity of about fifty children. The management plans the erection of ten of these cottages during the next few years.

Planning to Take Care of More Children.

During the next five years the capacity of the Home will probably be doubled.

The cottages which are soon to be erected, will enable the Home to take care of an increasing number. The new policy of the Home will also favor the admittance of more half-orphaned children who have lost but one parent, but who, in the majority of cases, are in as desperate need of the Home as are the orphans.

A Big Business Enterprise.

The cost of providing the living and educational expenses of a large family of 600 is enormous. These children have to have shoes and stockings and clothes the same as other children. The increased cost of living has run the daily expense of the Home up to the figure of about $500 per day. Eighty to ninety per cent of these expenses are cared for by the will offerings of the people of Texas. The individual and firm of the Home provides ten to twenty per cent of the expenses. The expenses of the Home for the next fiscal year will call for contributions to the amount of $175,000.

Daily Life of Children.

A child's life at this Home is regular and so arranged as to give it practical experience, combining the elements of play, work and education. In the morning the children go to school. In the afternoon they can be found out on the expansive grounds playing and frolicking—happy like other children. For the older boys and girls there is work to do—not burdensome and fold activities that go on within its own bounds. The Home has its own farm; a fine dairy, stocked with good milk cows; a power plant for heating and lighting; a laundry; a bakery; and a grammar school, and the first two years of high school, a regularly organized church with its own pastor; a Sunday School; a library of 3,000 volumes; and a museum, composed of two famous collections with many thousands of geological, faunal and zoological specimens and foreign curios from all over the world.

Warchest from Battlefield of Waterloo in Museum.

Among the many interesting relics in this museum, which is at all times accessible to the children, is an old steel bound warchest, which came from the battlefield of Waterloo. Tradition has it that this old chest belonged to the Duke of Wellington. A handsome helmet, said to have been worn at one time by Napoleon, is also in the historical collection. The museum is also the final resting place of a note old log cabin, which was the first residence ever built in Dallas county. For a time it served as the first post office for Dallas, and was also the first court house.

A Real Home.

Buckner Orphans Home is more than a charitable institution. It seeks to be a real home. Dr. Buckner, who died last year, was loved by all the children, and the visitor who happened in at the home would in all likelihood see the old white-haired man entirely surrounded by children of all ages, who clambered up on his knees with the same freedom and familiarity as does Johnny when "daddy" comes home from the office. Dr. Buckner was affectionately known as "Father Buckner" by all the children.

Missionary from China Takes Up Father's Work.

When Dr. Buckner died, his two sons took up his work. One of them, Rev. Hal Buckner, was a missionary in South China, but upon his father's death, he returned and became general secretary. Mr. Joe D. Buckner, who had been associated with his father in the administration of the home for several years, became general manager.

A New Departure in Orphanage Management.

It has always been the object of this orphanage to make it as much a home, and less an institution, as is possible in taking care of such service, for it is equitably divided, and the work is of such nature as to give the boys practical training in many of the trades and professions in which they will later make their own living; and the girls, training in home economics and management. Its record has been unexcelled. So far as the records go, no inmate of this home has never been before any court on any criminal charge. From the Home these boys and girls go into the great outside, work-day world, prepared to make their own livelihood, as honest and law-abiding citizens.
