Final Rites For S. J. Holder, 70, Held Friday

Well, this is Old Rip Week in Eastland, and regardless of who wins in the finals, the week started out cool and pleasant. Fact is Eastland got .16 of an inch of rain Sunday afternoon, and we haven't heard a single complaint.

Funeral services for S. J. Holder, 70-year-old pioneer Eastland County resident, were held at the Church of Christ in Desdemona Friday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock.

Last week we had a letter from an old friend in California. The letter came as the result of a story we turned to the Associated Press several days ago. Since sending the letter to the Dallas office it had been on the wires and on the air of most every Associated Press and radio station in the United States.

Following the funeral rites, Mr. Holder was laid to rest at the Stag Creek Cemetery in Comanche County at 4 p.m.

This derby business, even though just a little fun-producing pastime, is now being operated on a national scale.

Mr. Holder suffered a fatal heart attack Wednesday afternoon about 5 p.m. while working on his farm two and a half miles northwest of Desdemona. He had climbed down from his tractor and was getting a cool drink of water nearby when he was stricken. He was found by members of the family a few minutes later.

It is financed and sponsored by the Eastland Chamber of Commerce.

Mr. Holder was born in Georgia on June 6, 1883 and moved to Eastland County in 1917, settling on a farm four and a half miles southeast of Ranger.

And just by the way of parenthesis, Mr. Tanner of the Chamber of Commerce stated today that they are still in need of about 200 additional horned toads. Ten cents cash will be paid for each live toad. Get busy, boys, and pick up this easy money.

He moved to Desdemona 22 years ago. Mr. Holder was well known in this section and had been a member of the Church of Christ since early manhood.

Retailers "can't get along" without newspaper advertising, "and they had better not try." Those words didn't emanate from an advertising solicitor, but from a retailer, J. C. Penney, chairman of the board of the company that bears his name, and a man who knows how to sell merchandise.

Pvt. Bush Now Receiving Basic Army Training

"We can't do business without newspaper advertising," said Mr. Penney. "The newspapers are our market place where we come to cry our wares."

A BERDEEN PROVING GROUND, MD. — Private Thomas L. Bush, son of Mrs. Elizabeth Bush, 223 S. Oak St., Ranger, has arrived at the Ordnance Replacement Training Center here, where he will undergo eight weeks of basic military training before continuing his Army education in one of the technical schools of the Ordnance Corps.

"Let's leave the square for a moment and see what others are saying."

After completing his Army basic training Private Bush will become a full-fledged member of the Ordnance Corps, which is charged with the supply, maintenance and repair of everything the Army uses from trucks and tanks to timepieces and tin-shears.

"The public will get tax reductions if it is willing to forego extravagance in city, county, state and national affairs." — Oxford (N.Y.) Times.

In the Ordnance Replacement Training Center trainees are taught Ammunition Storage and Supply, Light Artillery Repair, Ordnance Storage and Supply, Small Arms Repair and Ordnance Blacksmithing. Other Ordnance schools throughout the country train mechanics, automotive and tank repairmen, anti-aircraft artillery maintenance men and many other trades useful to both the Army and the soldier.

"How much longer the American people will stand for millions to be spent on TVA, which is a Socialist movement, we do not know. The best thing would be for Uncle Sam to sell out TVA to private power companies. The latter would develop and carry on without spending millions of the taxpayers' money yearly." — Rutherford, N.C. News.

The Chamber of Commerce has issued an SOS!

Horned Toads are needed right now as they were never needed before. At least two hundred of these racers need to be on hand by tomorrow, according to Mr. Tanner. He has approximately 250 at this time but an additional 200 will be needed.

Rotarians Hear Grady Halbert, Dist. Governor

Grady Halbert, Rotary District Governor for the 186th district of which Eastland is a member, had the program at Monday's luncheon. Mr. Halbert resides in Fourd City, Tex.

The business session was short, though announcement was made that the club would have a booth at the Old Rip Derby, and an entry as well.

Rotarians were also asked to join in and help put over the Youth Center, and according to Mrs. H. C. Westfall, chairman, there will be a special town-wide meeting at the City Hall this evening at 7:30 o'clock. Parents are especially urged to attend.

The speaker dwelled at length on the value of good will, and Rotary's Good Will Ambassadors are doing a wonderful work in many sections of the world, as much of their work has to do with international understanding.

The Executive Secretary said there were no advance indications of drastic changes over the 1952 waterfowl season.

Cloudy Skies Cool Area, But Showers Light

Rain-promising, overcast skies over the Eastland County vicinity over the weekend brought welcome relief from a late July heat wave, but little moisture fell.

Showers were reported in most sections of the area, but all were of "negligible" or "trace" proportions.

Continued promise of rain was in the current forecast of the U. S. Weather Bureau.

For the Eastland County vicinity, today and Wednesday the weather men predicted partly cloudy skies and widely scattered thundershowers.

But it's also due to be sweltering with the maximum temperature for both days slated around 100 degrees.

The lowest reading tonight—in the high 70s.

For North Central Texas, partly cloudy Tuesday and Wednesday with widely scattered thundershowers. Not much change in temperature.

Massacre Mountains

THE STORY: The renegade Zad Barnes has just learned that two of his cronies, Pete Morrison and Nate Wilkinson, have slipped through his hands. He has thought that he had the best of things, but now he is a hunted man.

IT was bad enough, Zad Barnes thought, to let one intended victim slip through his fingers, but to let them both get away was more than he could endure. He had anticipated a gloating triumph when he brought back Nate Wilkinson's daughter and, in her father's presence, compelled her to marry Gabe Cox. Now, he thought savagely, if he caught them, he would give Betty to Tobey. After that, Tobey and his braves would take care of Wilkinson and Morrison.

He didn't dislike Betty personally—except when he thought of her father, and the humiliation and pain that man had once caused him to endure. There had been times when he was even fond of her, although he was always quick to anger when she displeased him. Another thing that had stayed his hand somewhat with regard to Betty was that old Jess Williams, who was his oldest and most dependable man, as Williams would have won the war they're out to have died for. His final coup was to be pulled off by Morrison, the officer without Williams' knowledge. Zad was, of course, instantly suspicious of Cass Dean, the beautiful woman who had arrived during the night with Al Tasker. She admitted having come here to find Morrison, but when he questioned her, her air of innocence was unconvincing enough to convince even Zad.

"You told me he wasn't here," she complained sulkily, "and I had no reason to doubt your word. He must have dug through that wall before I entered the room, but we didn't notice the hole because of the blanket. I was very tired and I slept soundly all night. Al she replied, "Pete and I were engaged once, but we broke because of the war. After it was over I got to thinking that perhaps we might make a go of it. Anyway, I wanted to see him. But when I saw him in Echo Junction the other day I realized it was no use."

"What I can't understand," Miss Dean said, "is what Pete could have done. Of course I haven't seen him but once in five years and he was a Yankee soldier."

"I certainly am," she said proudly. He was looking at this beautiful woman with new interest. It had been many a year since he had seen anything to match her. She was down here, completely in his hands. He could have her if he wanted her, but it would be nice if he could persuade her to come willingly. After all, he was not so old, and he had plenty of money.

He began to spin a fanciful tale of how he had contrived to enter the North all through the war, intimating that he had many times veered outside the law. She seemed to be listening to it with enthusiastic approval.

"But how does Pete Morrison come into it?" she asked. "Simple. Now that the Yankees have won the war they're out to punish me and take away everything I've got. Morrison is the man they sent to do it, and I outsmarted him."

"What were you going to do with him?" he wanted to tell her the truth, but didn't quite dare. "I intended to hold him a prisoner until the government agrees to pardon me. And I was going to make him take money in a way that he would never dare open his mouth."

"I think you are a very cunning man, Mr. Barnes. I look to me as if Pete had it coming to him. Why did you want to join him?" "It's a long story, Mr. Barnes," (To Be Continued)

THE day passed slowly, but the evening was made pleasant for Zad Barnes with supper followed by games of euchre with Cass Dean. She was good company and in one way or another, Zad told himself, he was going to keep her here.

Cass finally rose. "I'm going to turn in, Zad. It's been a nice evening." "I've enjoyed it too," he said. "If you'd played for the stakes I suggested you'd have won a couple hundred dollars." "I can't afford to gamble that big," she smiled. "Can you?" "Zad said, 'I don't like to brag but I could lose 10 times that much and never miss it.' It was just as well to let the girl know that he was rich."

She smiled enigmatically and went off to bed. A little after midnight he was awakened by Gabe Cox and Al Tasker. "We got Wilkinson for you, Zad," Tasker announced. A wolflike grin spread over Barnes' face. "Good!" he ejaculated. "What about Morrison?" "We met Gabe bringing Wilkinson down here, but I may scften a little—I'll give Betty her choice. She can marry my friend Gabe there—or Tobey."

Nate cast a quick glance at the unlovely Gabe Cox. "I don't know which would be better," he said, "but you can't do this. You haven't got her, and you can't get her."

"I always hated you, Wilkinson, and on the same piece of paper says, 'Do as this boy says.' So that's how you got away, Wilkinson. Your friend bribed my Indian boy." Nate Wilkinson regretted bitterly that he had forgotten to destroy the two scraps of paper. Because of this carelessness he had doubtless brought about the doom of the Indian boy. Zad said, "Tell Herb Painter to ride out and bring Walter in here back from our last encounter." "You got only what a hog-thief deserved," Nate said calmly.

here, I'm going to send him back to Pangenet with a bunch of his men. I'll tell him that if he can bring that girl back here he can have her."

"Aw, look, Zad—" Gabe Cox started to protest. "You had your chance, and you muffed it. If you get her now, you'll have to make a deal with Tobey."

In a few minutes Al Tasker returned with Tobey. Nate Wilkinson took one look at the brutal Indian, then had to avert his gaze. Barnes spoke rapidly in some sort of Indian tongue. Tobey nodded vehemently and disappeared. Wilkinson said, "I don't care what you do to me, Tobey, or Barnes, if that's your name now, but if you have any human decency you'll call back that Indian."

"I knew I'd have you begging," Zad gloated. "And you'll be begging a lot harder before I'm through with you. I play square with my Indians and they play square with me. That's why I'm doing so well. Search him, boys. We'd just as well find out if he's got anything on him."

WHILE one of them held a gun on Nate the other went through his pockets. They were the notes Pete had given Walter to deliver. "Here's something," Tasker said, as he produced two crumpled pieces of paper from one of Nate's pockets. Zad Barnes took the two scraps and straightened them out. "This one," he said, "is the note Morrison wrote to a John Belknap telling him to come down here. And this one, in the same handwriting, and on the same piece of paper says, 'Do as this boy says.' So that's how you got away, Wilkinson. Your friend bribed my Indian boy."

Nate Wilkinson regretted bitterly that he had forgotten to destroy the two scraps of paper. Because of this carelessness he had doubtless brought about the doom of the Indian boy. Zad said, "Tell Herb Painter to ride out and bring Walter in here back from our last encounter." "You got only what a hog-thief deserved," Nate said calmly.

WORKING back through the mountains infested with hostile Indians would be a dangerous undertaking, Pete Morrison believed. He probably could make better time on the High Valley route. In no event could he hope to get back to Two Rivers before morning, and he certainly could not hope to approach the place in daylight.

If Zad Barnes intended to murder Nate Wilkinson immediately, Nate would already be dead. If Zad intended to hold Wilkinson prisoner for reasons of his own, it would probably be days before Nate was killed. And it was on this assumption that Pete had to act.

Pete took an extra horse from Hoot Anderson's stable, and enough supplies to last a week. Except when going through one high pass, which he did in the middle of the night, he avoided the road and skirted the base of the mountains, keeping in timber as much as possible.

Morning found him looking down upon High Valley. It was far from flat and although he could see the ranch that Barnes had staked out, the buildings were hidden from view by a hill. He felt some worry about the Indian boy Walker but there was nothing he could do about it; nothing to be gained by letting anyone know he was back in the country.

After he had eaten a cold breakfast he stretched out on a level place for some much-needed sleep, and it was nearly sundown when he awakened. He arose and walked over the ridge to where he could look down upon the road from High Valley to Two Rivers. He had scarcely come in sight of it when he heard the clatter of wheels, and a minute later a buggy came in sight, headed toward Two Rivers, and he could see them clearly. Zad evidently was telling some story and Cass was listening with smiling enjoyment.

He had the dejected feeling that he need not have worried over Cass. She would take care of herself. It angered him to see her on such good terms with a cold-blooded reprobate, but he realized that it was good sense on her part to cultivate the fellow, now that she was here. His feeling was pretty close to jealousy.

He watched them drive on toward Two Rivers, then walked back to his camp and under cover of darkness built a small fire and cooked himself a meal.

SHORTLY before midnight he headed for Two Rivers, leading the extra horse, but leaving his supplies behind. He reached the cottonwoods and willows just below where Santos and Escalante rivers came together. He watered the animals again and tied them deep in the brush. On foot, he made his way toward the trading post.

He was strongly tempted to try to see Cass, but gave it up. Her door might be watched, and it was unlikely that she would know anything about Nate anyway. It was better to do his own scouting.

There were several Indian camps close about the post, and this made maneuvering difficult. Nate, if alive, was probably being held in one of the stronger buildings outside the court proper, and he would be heavily guarded.

He was moving up on one of them when he heard a giggle. There was no shelter so he dropped flat on the earth, trusting that in the darkness he would not be seen. A moment later he saw two people apparently heading straight for him. It was the Indian girl, Sally, and her companion was a white man.

Pete had his gun in hand, ready to shoot if he had to, although it would cause an alarm that would certainly foil his plans for the present. The couple stopped perhaps 20 feet from him, the girl still giggling. The girl giggled again, then the man said, "Old Zad will do all right for himself, looks like. That white woman is sure a looker."

"You let her alone—me kill her," the girl said savagely. The man laughed. "Keep your little buckskin shirt on," he said. "She's Zad's girl. Beat it now, I got to relieve Tex."

The girl headed for the court at a run. She passed within six feet of where Pete lay, but didn't see him because she was looking back over her shoulder. The man turned and walked over to a cabin just beyond the one Pete had been working toward.

Pete was on his feet a moment after they were out of sight, and moved swiftly toward the building he had intended to inspect. He heard the murmur of voices, but couldn't hear what they said. He froze against the side of the building as he heard a man walking toward him.

AT the end of the building the man stopped and called back, "I'm warnin' you, Herb. You're in bad with Zad right now, and if you go to sleep on guard duty what he'll have Tobey do to you won't be nice. Foolin' around with that Injun gal when you oughta been gittin' some sleep."

"Don't worry about me," Herb called sulkily in reply. The man, Tex, came around the corner of the building so close that Pete could have reached out and touched him, but he passed on and Pete was spared having to knock him out.

Pete no longer had any doubt that someone was being held in the next building, and it was almost certain to be Nate. The job of liberating him still lay ahead. A difficult and dangerous task, but Pete was elated because Nate probably was alive.

Pete could not afford to act rashly now. He must wait and make his plans. Sooner or later he would have a chance to free Nate Wilkinson.

Mulch is Hailed as New Wonder Aid to Garden

By spreading a mulch once, the gardener saves many hours of cultivating.

heavy rain falling directly on the soil sends up dust which is blown away, to the garden's loss. This is advanced by a government bulletin.

The type of mulch which is now recommended excludes paper, sheet aluminum, concrete or any other covering which does not give free access to the soil for both air and water. Straw, leaves, dried lawn clippings, cut weeds, manure, ground-up corn cobs, sawdust, any such material not toxic to plants, will serve to shade the soil, keep it cool, retain moisture and keep down weeds, while allowing free access to air and water, much to the benefit of both plants and gardener.

Even the modern type of cultivation, which stirs the soil only an inch deep, breaking up the crust and destroying weeds in infancy, becomes unnecessary with a mulch.

"Men who have gardened for years, but who were not taught to use mulches continuously, express surprise at what a wonderful help they have found at last," says the government bulletin.

The earlier mulches are applied the better, though their greatest value comes later in the summer. Tomatoes, especially, need their protection, to prevent extreme dryness in the soil, which causes blossom end rot in the fruit. But the new idea is that all crops will benefit by a mulch, including the flowers in your border.

Ground corn cobs and saw dust are both likely to draw nitrogen from the soil to feed the bacteria which cause their decay. To prevent this a nitrogen plant food should be mixed with the mulching material. All material of organic origin which is used for mulching can be spaded into the soil at the end of the season and will help improve the soil texture and humus content.

The Auto is a Dandy but a Death-Dealer—
... A lot of people imagine the automobile to be a wonderful plaything like a shining toy, but actually it is a death-dealing machine. The National Safety Council says the average motorist makes from 20 to 50 decisions an hour. What happens if only one of these decisions is wrong? In heavy going a driver is never more than one second away from an accident. So folks go right ahead but don't blame us if you never come back.
