A BIG LAND DEAL MADE THIS WEEK

A deal was consummated this week whereby Mrs. E. D. Dishman sold her half section of land just south of town to Joe Kendall. Mrs. Dishman besides a large cash consideration became owner of Joe Kendall's home in town.

Mr. Kendall then sold 80 acres of the half section, said 80 takes in the old home place, to Jessie Ring of Ring who expects to move to the in the near future. Mr. Kendall also sold 120 acres of the half to W. C. Smith of Bray who will also move to the place. The land nearest town was retained by Mr. Kendall who will possibly build a fine residence there in the near future, and Mrs. Dishman will move to the place in town which she acquired in the deal.

When you read the Informer hand it to your neighbor and tell him we want him for a subscriber if he likes the paper.

FOR SALE

Two good work mares for $175 cash; two good work mules for $150. W. W. Crawford.

That winter has set in is shown by the thermometers all trying to "swink" up this week. But we have no kick to make after all the fine weather we've enjoyed all the fall.

The Informer desires to get correspondents in every community around Hedley to report the happenings and will furnish stationery, stamps, etc. and send the paper to any one who will act as such.

J. B. Masterson and family have moved to Memphis at which place he has a position as dry goods salesman. Their household goods were sent down Wednesday. Hedley loses and Memphis gains in this move.

SOLILOQUY OF A SCHOOL BOY

Just Before Examination

Examinations pangs I feel
They thrill me through and through;
But I will stand it like a man;
Now all I can I'll do.

Arithmetic is very hard
With all its pesky "figgers,"
And every I think of them
It gives me reg'lar riggers.

And latin, too, is kinder bad
With amo, is and fuit;
I'll back my ears and grit my teeth
And bust myself or do it.

And grammer with nine parts of speech
Is one conglomeration;
If I'd my way about the stuff
I'd land it in damnation.

Then all those plus and minus signs
With X's, Y's and Z's,
Will make a fellow's brain to whirl
And place him ill at ease.

The earth has been to me
A kind of mystic ball;
To study 'bout it in the books
Just makes my flesh to crawl.

Oh, how I dread it every bit,--
This mighty 'zamination;
It fills me full from head to foot
With fear and consternation.

REPORT FROM THE HEDLEY GIN

Up to date the gin at Hedley has ginned about 1185 bates of cotton. The ginners are now almost certain they will get enough to make their 1500 they first figured. That's not a bad showing.

Mrs. Fowler died at the hospital in Clarendon last Saturday night and was buried here Monday. She was sick for a long time, underwent an operation, and finally succumbed to the fatal malady from which she was suffering.

J. W. Bond now working at Sunset, spent a few days with his family first of the week. Sunday they had quite a reunion. Their son Loren and daughter Bertha of McKnight, and Mrs. Marshall of Memphis, sister of Mrs. Bond, all spent the day with them.

Last Tuesday the north bound local stopped at Hedley and a call for medical aid was put in. While loading cattle at Giles the conductor was hurt in the breast and was brought here for medical attention. He was not thought to be seriously hurt, though at that time the physicians were not able to determine the extent of his injuries.

Vol. 1, No. 1 of the Hedley Informer, edited by J. Claude Wells, of Hedley, Texas, came to our desk last week, a full grown, six column six page country newspaper full of news and good editorials. Mr. Wells has started the Informer on a high plane, and the people of his town and country should feel proud of their new addition in this respect. Here's success.--Panhandle Herald.

Young man that beautiful girl, whom you worship as a quill of unadulterated sweetness, doesn't contain even three ounces of sugar. It has been shown by analysis that a young person weighing 154 lbs is composed of 96 lbs of water, 3 lbs of the white of eggs, a little less than a pound of glue, 34 1-2 lbs of fat, 8 14 lbs of phosphate of lime, 3 oz of sugar and starch, 7 oz of chloride of calcium, 9 ozs of phosphate of magnesia and a little ordinary table salt.--Ex.

J. A. Long returned Thursday from a visit in Pinola county, his old home.

I have had a good business since opening a barber shop here and wish to thank you for your patronage. Come again and you will be treated right.
E. L. YELTON, the barber.

NOTES FROM HEDLEY HIGH SCHOOL

We are sorry to report the absence of some pupils on account of sickness. We hope for them to be able to return to school in a short time. Several pupils who have been out of school picking cotton are now back with us. It is good to have them back again and we hope that they may be able to stay with us until school closes.

Pupils are making preparations on a program to be rendered on Thanksgiving night. This will be interesting and instructive and we hope to see a goodly number of patrons and friends present on that occasion.

There is still nothing unpleasant to report in connection with the school. The pupils all seem to be too high minded and are too loyal to their school to act in such a manner as to make the work unpleasant.

One morning at the opening exercises of school each pupil in High school was asked to write one reason on the topic "Why I go to school." Following will be found a few of the reasons given by the pupils. "I go to school to gain knowledge, so that I may be of some use to some one, and do some good in the world."

"I go to school to prepare myself for after life."

We go to school not only to learn to read and write, but to learn to be good citizens."

"I go to school to gain more knowledge and to increase my thinking faculties that I may help to make the world better and help others gain knowledge."

"I go to school that I may some time make a portion of the world brighter and better by my living"

Each pupil present responded with a reason similar to the ones given above. It is indeed inspiring to note what lofty ideals the pupils have and to know what noble inspirations animate their beings. All of them expressed themselves as being in school for the purpose of preparing for service for their fellowman. No ambition could be higher, no aspirations holier, no purpose nobler, and no achievement greater. The human race seems to be getting better and man at last is learning that it is his duty to aid his fellow being. And some one has truthfully said that "Duty is the sublimest word in our language." The pupils of Hedley are in the front ranks of those who believe this to be true. Such pupils are a credit to their school, a blessing to their community, and an honor to their parents.

The people of Hedley ought to be proud of their school and the noble pupils who make it largely what it is.

The Hungers of Life A Thanksgiving Inspiration

Hunger is the voice of a void. It is Nature demanding her rights. It is the restless, insistent cry of an instinct clamoring to be satisfied. The claim of a hungry body has right of way over all other needs; it requires no credentials, no argument, no advocate. It holds a first mortgage on the sympathy and aid of humanity. But the hunger for food has no monopoly on the hungers of life. In the world today there are in reality more people starving for love than for bread; more heart-hunger than body-hunger; more unsatisfied yearning for sympathy, affection, companionship, kindness, and appreciation than for food. There is heart-hunger, mind-hunger, soul-hunger—real, vital, relentless, insatiable.

These hungers are not a modern invention; they are as old as history; they began in the Garden of Eden. When Adam's bodily hunger was recognized and great stores of growing food insured him against starvation, the hunger of his heart was quieted by a wife and companion; then the mind-hunger and soul-hunger of this first married couple led them to wish to become as gods and to know good and evil, for they hungered for the fruit of the tree of knowledge. And we have all these hungers because we are human, because we are higher than the mere animals. These hungers are aspirations and were meant to be satisfied. Life is a battle for our hungers.

True living means realizing the real hungers of ourselves and others and seeking to satisfy them. False living means vainly humoring morbid acquired appetites. At this Thanksgiving season, when the cup of gratitude overflows to others, let us realize feeding the body-hunger is simply an initial duty, a first privilege of human brother-hood, good enough as a beginning of our activity, not good enough as a finality. Let us give others not merely what we have, but what we are. Let us feed their higher hungers not merely on one day only, but in unbroken years of such days, making this Thanksgiving spirit, like a persistent, pervading perfume of inspiration, permeate and sweeten our own lives and those of others.

The great heart-hunger of humanity is—loneliness. Loneliness is the heart's realization that no one is self-sufficient, no one is complete alone. It is always the restless yearning in some form, for God's greatest gift to man—love. We seek it ever, consciously or unconsciously, as the great gnarled roots of trees, guided by some divine instinct, ever reaching out in their constant search for the water that means life to them. The hunger for friends, sympathy, appreciation, confidence and companionship are simply phases, degrees, or tendencies of the hunger for love.

In a great city there are countless thousands of men and women leading lives of loneliness; they are heart-hungry for the affection they feel is their due and their right. It is not the burden of daily toil, the pettiness of the reward, the dull round of daily duties that make them heart-weary, but the benumbing sense of loneliness that sometimes sweeps over the soul like a mighty tide and submerges every thought but that of their hunger for affection. They want some one to whom they can tell the little incidents that make up their days, some one to be genuinely interested, some one to share their little joys and sorrows, some one to smother away the lines of care and worry, some one whose eyes will brighten at their approach, some one to whom they will be necessary, some one who will fill their sky with the sunshine of love and the glow of trust and confidence. They want some one to live for, some one to work for, some one to need them.

It is not always clearly formulated or even clearly understood, for the heart's feeling is often beyond its powers to express. It may be only a vague, restless unsatisfiedness, but all the energies and emotions of the heart silently sweep themselves in one direction, as rivers, unknowing why, seek the ocean. And with this heart-hunger satisfied, the magic hand of Time seems to have changed suddenly the whole perspective of life, and the harsh outlines of care and troubles seem, softened and transformed, as the moon throws a glorifying silver light of interpretation over even the most prosaic landscapes.

When this heart-hunger is unappeased, we may take cocaine of distraction that dull the pain they do not remove. We do a thousand little things to kill the time that hangs heavy on our hands, but this is not true living; it is the dullness of drugged emotion that keeps us from our best selves; it does not bring true peace, it is only numbness. Real peace comes from oneself, temporary oblivion from losing oneself.

This heart-hunger is so real it is not limited to those leading lives of real loneliness; it finds itself in homes where there is the semblance of real companionship, but not its actuality, its cold, bare anatomy, not its living, pulsing, vitalizing soul.

There is a divine paradox in feeding the heart-hungry. As we seek to appease the heart-hunger of another our own grows less. The food increases in the using, as at the miraculous feeding of the four thousand at the sermon in the wilderness what remained after all were fed was greater than the original supply. Let us make others forget their heart-hunger in the kindness, thoughtfulness, consideration, sympathy, companionship, and affection we can give them. Let us forget our own heart-hunger in feeding others, even though we silence it in no other way. No one occupies so humble a position that he cannot help others. It means only giving those priceless things that no mere money can buy.

There are times in the life of all when, weak and worn with the struggle, the ebb-tide of hope seems to carry out with it all inspiration, all impulse, all incentive. In the starless night of a great loss, a paralyzing pain or a voiceless grief we seem to lose our very bearings on life, and weak, trembling hands hold the useless compass of our purpose. We see nothing to live for, and life does not then seem worth the living. At such an hour the inspiring strength of a hand stretched out to us in the darkness and closing firmly over ours, the gentle words of comfort and courage and companionship—words that come glowing from the very soul of another, not have just this week been received and lots of them are still coming in daily. Our business this fall has been much better than we expected, and we have found it necessary to make another trip to market. Our buyer has just returned from the Eastern markets where he has been for some time purchasing a new stock of goods to meet the demands we are having for them. He made these purchases for our two stores in connection with the buyers for the Perkins Bros. Co. chain of twenty big cash stores.

It is just now the season of the year when the wholesalers and manufacturers are especially anxious to part with their winter merchandise as they are now getting ready for spring goods, and they are making big concessions to do so, especially when you buy them in such quantities as we were able to use. To push out these goods they sold lots of goods at less than the cost of manufacturing, and as is always the case, our customers will derive the benefit of this close buying.

Right now is the season of the year when you most need goods, and the stocks at most stores are run down and have been picked over. We were never in better shape to take care of your wants than we are now. A big new stock at this season of year is something you seldom find.

WE SELL FOR CASH AND HANDLE NOTHING BUT NEW, CLEAN, FIRST-CLASS MERCHANDISE. WE WILL SELL YOU FIRST-CLASS MERCHANDISE CHEAPER THAN YOU CAN BUY "JUNK" AT LOTS OF OTHER STORES AND AT SO-CALLED SALES.

A. M. BAILEY

Bro. A. M. Bailey died Monday night Nov. 14. He was 66 years old Nov. 3rd. He lived in Cook Co. since the year of 1870 until a few years ago. He moved three years ago four and one half miles east of Hedley. Bro. Bailey was a good christian, having served as steward in the Methodist church for thirty five years. He was always a leader in the church and also among the good people of the country in which he lived. He was a true citizen in every sense of the word, a loyal friend, kind and accommodating neighbor and a devoted husband. We know that Bro Bailey is with the angels, the pure and the good in that bright celestial city beyond the skies. He leaves a broken hearted wife, five children, one sister, and a host of friends to mourn his loss.

Weep not as those who have no hope for you can meet your loved ones by and by when the storms of life shall have blown over, in that house not made with hands eternal in the heavens. Rev. N. H. Brown of Whitesboro, Texas, who had lived near Bro. Bailey and known him for 20 years, conducted the funeral services assisted by Rev. J. B. Wood, the pastor. Many nice things were spoken of Bro. Bailey by the preachers.

A FRIEND.

HOW'S THIS FOR COTTON PICKING

Five-year-old Boy breaks the record--102 lbs in 5 1-3 hours

W. O. McDaniel was in the Informer office Monday to have a correction made in the statement of last week concerning the time his five-year-old son Oliver picked 102 pounds of cotton. He picked that amount in six and a half hours instead of seven and a half.

But that isn't all. Oliver last Friday picked 102 pounds in five hours and twenty minutes.

Mr. McDaniel says the boy picks willingly and keeps one row up with his two and all the time he picks sings "Home, Sweet Home."

Hedley still claims the champion cotton picker of the Panhandle, age taken into consideration.

Considerable stirring around is going on in Hedley in the real estate line, and we understand that several deals are on foot. Surely Hedley will grow. How can she do otherwise when she has such a great country back of her?

empty, cheap commonplace that roll flippantly from the tongue—come as living food to the hungry heart.

When the trials of the individual life seem hard to bear and the failures of our best efforts tempt us to overthrow the altars of our ideals, and all that we have held high and best seem an empty delusion, we feel this hunger for a friend, a counselor, a guide. We want fresh, kindly eyes to look at our problems, to help us retain our faith in humanity, our belief in ourselves, our trust in the final triumph of right and truth.

To feed the heart-hungry we must give the positives of our life, not the negations; we must give our strength, not our weakness; our certainties, not our fears; our radiant finalities of decision, not our unsettled dilemmas.

If we were to transform "feed the hungry" from a mere phrase into a vital impulse finding expression in every day of our living, we would bring the very spirit of the millennium into the expanding circle our individual life and influence. We would realize that these hungers are real and were given to man that they might be satisfied. They are not to be confused with morbid appetites, counterfeit hungers, man made out of the idle hours of his folly, that must be killed, starved into submission, dominated, mastered, vanquished by the individual who would be true to his kingship over himself.

Mind-hunger has its infinite phases as well as heart-hunger, man's insatiate desire to know the truth. Soul-hunger has existed in man since the beginning of time. All the religion of the world are simply systems to feed this spiritual hunger. Hunger is the consciousness of incompleteness; the belief of immortality, another world, a new life is simply the last great hunger of the soul. Feeding the hungry, in its largest phases, is but the Golden Rule amplified, simplified, and intensified in our daily living.—The Circle.
