Farm Facts

Farmers are borrowing more money than ever before. In the face of the trend toward larger farms, credit helps provide the things they need to produce more efficiently.

The farmer's use of credit will continue to mount, notes W. D. Curtis, economist with the Louisiana State Agricultural Service. This will be due to: (1) greater investment per farm; (2) an increase in the use of power, fertilizer, chemicals, better seed, and other production necessities; (3) failure of savings to keep pace with mounting capital needs; and (4) a more businesslike approach to credit—if convinced it will pay them to borrow, they borrow.

From 1953 to 1960, the dollar volume of farm credit system loans increased 120%, while the number of farms decreased 30%. Long-term mortgage loans by federal land banks increased 18%, while short- and intermediate-term loans by production credit associations increased by nearly 26%.

Despite the trend to "commercial" farms, the farm family will remain important because it performs the major share of work on these farms.
