M'CULLOCH COUNTY TEACHERS OR-GANIZE ASSOCIATION LAST WEEK:

ALSO COMPLETED ORGANIZATION OF INTERSCHOLASTIC LEAGUE WITH EVERY SCHOOL IN COUNTY A MEMBER—BASKET BALL SCHEDULE COMPLETED.

Declaring the teachers institute held in Brownwood the past week as one of the best meetings ever had, W. M. Deans, McCulloch county superintendent voiced the unanimous verdict of all + McCulloch county teachers. A splendid school spirit, fostered by the college atmosphere, aided in making the institute, in which the teachers of five counties were joined, the great success it was, and there was no question but what it was worth the money for + any school to have had its teachers in attendance upon the institute. The citizens of Brownwood showed the visiting teachers every courtesy and attention, entertaining them at every opportunity, giving receptions for them, and treating them royally. No concert of action was had in the matter of organizing the institute permanently, although general sentiment favored Brownwood as the place for holding the joint institutes.

AMERICAN LEGION ORGANIZES HERE FRIDAY NIGHT-LUNCHEON PLANNED

EX-SERVICE MEN PLAN ROUSING MEETING OF CITIZENS TO AID IN ESTABLISHING POST IN McCULLOCH COUNTY-WILL SERVE REFRESHMENTS.

The plans for organizing a local American Legion Post, as now completed, call for a luncheon at the Odd Fellows Hall Friday night, instead of the mass meeting at the courthouse as at first planned. Also the election of permanent officers and the performing of all ceremonies will be completed at the initial meeting. Ex-service men from every point in McCulloch county are expected to be present and take part in the meeting, as this is to be a county organization, and every World War veteran is wanted as a member. Every citizen is invited to be out and help put pep into the meeting as well. John R. Lapp Post of Eden will be in attendance and perform all the ceremonies.

On the floor, near her bed, where Patty Fairchild had left her cost and hat, Florenca made her second discovery. Two small, folded slips of paper lay there, dropped by Miss Fairchild when she put on her cost in the child when she put on her coat in the darkening room. They were the replies to Patty's whispered questions in the game on the steps—the pledged Truth, writ'en by Henry Rooter and Herbert Atwater on their sacred words and honors. The infatuated pair had either overestimated Patty's caution either overestimated Patty's caution, or else each had thought she would so prize his little missive that she would treasure it in a tender safety, perhaps pinned upon her blouse (at the first opportunity) over the heart. It he positively safe to say that neither of the two veracities would ever have been set upon paper had Herbert and Henry any foreshadowing that Patty might be careless; and the partners would have be a selzed with the utmost horror could they have conceived the possibility of their trustful messages ever falling into the hands of the relentless creature who now, without as instant's honorable healtation, unfolded and read them.

"Yes, if I got to tell the truth. I know I have not pretty area," Herbert had unfortunately written. "I am glad you think so, or atty, because your eyes a too. Herbert Illingsworth Atwate. In: of the two veracities would ever have these plastic tokens, so immoderate as to be ordinarily the consequence of nothing short of polgnant horror, were overlaid by others, subtler and more gleaming, which wrought the true significance of the contortion—a joy that was dumfounding.

Her thoughts were first of Fortune's kindness in selecting her for a favor so miraculously dovetailing into the precise need of her life, then of Henry and Heroert, each at this hour prob-ably brushing his hair in preparation for the Sunday evening meal, and both touchingly unconscious of the calamifor Florence. On Sunday evening it was her privileged custom to go to the house of her fat, old great-uncle, Joseph Atwater, and remain until nine o'clock, in chatty companionship with Uncle Joseph and Aunt Carrie, his wife, and a few other relatives who were in the habit of dropping in there on Sunday evenings. In summer, emonade and cake were frequently provided; in the autumn, one still found cake, and perhaps a pitcher of clear new cider; apples were always for Florence there was now no such temptation. Looking toward the dea certainty. This evening was glorious; there were apples and cider and cake and walnuts, perfectly cracked, and slarge open-hearted box of candy Naturally, these being the circum stances, Herbert was among the guests; and, though rather at a dis-advantage, so far as the conversation was concerned, not troubled by the handleap. The reason he was at a conversational disadvantage was closely connected with the unusual supply of refreshments; Uncle Joseph and Aunt Carrie had foreseen the coming of several more Atwaters than coming of several more Atwaters than usual, to talk over the new affairs of their beautiful relative, Julia. Seldem have any relative's new affairs been more thoroughly talked over than were Julia's that evening, though all the time by means of various symbols, since it was thought wiser that Herbert and Florence should not yet be told of Julia's engagement, and Flor-ence's parents were not present to confess their indiscretion, Julia was referred to as "the traveler," and other makeshifts were employed with the most knowing caution; and all the while Florence merely ate inscrutably. The more sincere Herbert was as placid; such foods were enough for

"Well, all I say is, the traveler bet-ter enjoy herself on her travels," said Aunt Fanny finally, as the subject appeared to be wearing toward ex haustion. "She certainly is in for fi haustion. "She certainly is in for it when the voyaging is over and she arrives in the port she salled from, and has to show her papers. I agree with the rest of you; she'll have a freat deal to answer for, and most of all about the shortest one. My own opinion is that the shortest one is going to burst like a balloon."

"The shortest one," as the demure Florence had understood from the first, was her ideal—none other than Noble Dill. Now she looked up from the stool where she sat with her back the stool where she sat with ber back against a pilaster of the mantelpiece.

"Uncle Joseph," she said—"I was fust was no more sobering threat than,

"I'll tell Wallie Torbin;" As for Hebry Rooter and Herbert filingsworth Atwater, Ir., they would as soon have had a head-hunter on their traff

What do you mean, 'a person's reason,' Florence?'

They'll lose their reason," she ex-plained. "Has everybody got a rea-son, and if they have, what is it, and now do they lose it, and what would they do then?"

"Oh, I see!" he said. "You needn't worry. I suppose since you heard it, you've been hunting all over yourself for your reason and looking to see if there was one hanging out of anybody else, somewhere. No: it's something you can't see ordinarily, Florence. ing your reason is just another way of saying 'going crazy!'

"Oh," she murmured, and appeared to be somewhat disturbed.

At this, Herbert thought proper to ofter a wittletsm for the pleasure of the company.

"You know, Morence," he said, "it only means acting like you most always do." He applauded himself with a burst of changing laughter which ranged from a builtrog croak to a collapsing soprano; then he added: "Especially when you come around my and Henry's newspaper building! "Especially when you come around my and Henry's newspaper building! You certainly 'loo! your reason' every time you come around that ole place!"
"Well, course I but to act like the people that's already there." Florence retorted, not sharply, but in a musing tone that should have warned him. It was not her wont to use a dulet voice for reparted. Thinking her humble, he laughed the more reucously.

"Oh, Florence!" he besought her. Say not so! Say not so!"

"Children, children!" Uncle Joseph Herbert changed his tone; he be came seriously plaintive. "Well, she does act that way, Uncle Joseph!

When she comes around there you'd think we were runnin' a lunatic asylum the way she takes on. She hollers and bellers and squalls and squawks. The least little teeny thing she don't like about the way we run

"I toriously, the cone is more nable to infraction by people of the physically weaker sex, for the very reason, of just exackly as soon be a little sweet to an alligator," he asserted; such was his bitterness on this subject.

"You ought to just come around our newspaper building any afternoon you please, after school, when Henry and I are tryin' to do our work in, anyway, some peace. Why, she just squawks and squalls and squ—"

"It must be terrible," Uncle Joseph interrupted. "What do you do all that for, Florence, every afternoon?"

"Just for exercise," she answered dreamily; and her placidity the more exasperated her journalist cousin. "She does it because she thinks she ought to be runnin' our own newspaper, my and Henry's; that's why she does it! She thinks she knows more about how to run newspapers than anybody alive; but there's one thing she's goin' to find out; and that is, she don't have anything more to do with my and Henry's newspaper. We wouldn't have another single one of her ole poems in it, no matter how much she offered to pay us! Uncle Joseph, I think you ought to tell her she's got no business around my and Henry's newspaper building."

"But, Herbert," Aunt Fanny suggested, "you might let Florence have gested, "you might let Florence have a little share in it of some sort. Then everything would be all right."

"It would?" he demanded, his voice cracking naturally, at his age, but also under strain of the protest he wished if to express. "It wee-wuld? Oh, my goodness, Aunt Fanny, I guess you'd like to see our newspaper just utterably ruined! Why, we wouldn't left that girl have any more to do with ft than we would some horse?"

"Oh, oh!" both Aunt Fanny and Aunt Carrie exclaimed, shocked. "We wouldn't," Herbert insisted "A forse would know any amount more how to run a newspaper than she does; anyway, a horse wouldn't make so much noise around there. Soon at we got our printing press; we said right then that we made up our minds Florence Atwater was n't ever goln' to Florence Atwater was n't ever goln' to have a single thing to do with our newspaper. If you let her have anything to do with anything she wants to run the whole thing. But she might just as well learn to stay away from our newspaper building, because after we got her out yesterday we fixed a way so's she'll never got in them. way so's she'll never get in there

Florence looked at him demurely.
"Are you sure, Herbert?" she in-

"Just you try it!" he advised, with heardest sarcasm; and he laughed tauntingly. "Just come around to-morrow and try it; that's all I ask!" "I certally intend to," she responded, with dignar. "L may have a sught surprise for you."

"Oh, Florence, say not so! Say not so, Florence! Say not so!" At this she looked full upon him, and already she had something in the and already sne nau sometime; for so nature of a surprise for him; for so powerful was the still balefulness her glance he was slightly startled.

"What-You Mean?"

"I might say not so," she said—"If I was speaking of what pretty eyes you know you have, Herbert." It staggered him. "What-whe you mean?"

"Oh, nothin," she replied, sirily.
Herbert began to be mistrustral of the solid earth. Somewhere there was fearful torest to his equipo What you talkin' about?" he said, with an effort to speak scornfully; but his sensitive voice almost falled about what preity eyes you know you have, and Patty's being anyway as pretty as yours-and so you're glad paybe she thinks yours are pretty, the way you do-and everything!" Herbert visibly gulped. So Patty had betrayed him; had betrayed the sworn confidence of "Truth!"

"That's all I was talkin' about." Florence added. "Just about how you new you had such pretty eyes. Say not so, Herbert! Say not so!" "Look here!" he said. "When'd you see racey again between this afterboon and when you came over here?" 'What makes you think I saw her?"

"Did you telephone her?"
"What makes you think so?"
Once more Herbert gulped. "Well,
I guess you're ready to believe anything anybody tells you," he said, with a palsied bravado. "You don't believe everything Patty Fairchild says, do you?" 'Why, Herbert! Doesn't she always tell the Truth?"

"Her? Why, half the time," poor Herbert babbled, "you can't tell whether she just makin' up what she says or not. If you've gone and be-lieved everything that ole girl told you, you haven't got even what little sense I used to think you had!" So base we are under strain, sometimesso base when our good name is threat ened with the truth of us! "I wouldn't believe anything she said," he finished, in a sickish voice, "if she told me fifty times and crossed her heart!"

"Wouldn't you if she said you wrote down how pretty you knew your eyes were, Herbert?"

"What's this about Herbert having 'pretty eyes'?" Mr. Joseph Atwater in-quired; and Herbert shuddered. Un-cle Joseph had an unpleasant reputation as a joker.

The nephew desperately fell back upon the hopeless device of attempting to drown out his opponent's voice as she began to reply. He became vociferous with scornful laughter bad-ly cracked in the scorn. "Florence got mad!" he shouted, mingling the purported information with loud cack-Henry played games with Patty! She's tryin' to make up sement to get even.

She made it up! It's all made up!

"No, so," Mr. Atwater interrupted. "Let Florence fell us. Florence, what was it about Herbert knowing be had pretty eyes?"

Herbert attempted to continue the drowning out. He bawled, "She made if up! It's somep'm she made up herself! She—"

"Herbert," said Uncle Joseph-"if you don't keep gulet, I'll take back the printing press."

Herbert substituted snother

for a continuation of his noise. "Now, Florence," said Uncle Joseph, "tell as what you were saying about how Herbert knows he had such pretty eyes."

Then it seemed a miracle befell. Florence looked up, smiling modestly. "Oh, it wasn't anything, Uncle Joseph," she said. "I was just trying to tease Herbert any way I could think up."

"Oh, was that all?" A hopeful light faded out of Uncle Joseph's large and inexpressive face. "I thought perhaps you'd detected bim in some thillscretton."

Florence laughed, "I was just tensin him. It wasn't anything, Uncle

Joseph."

Hereupon Herbert resumed a confused breathing. Dazed he remained breasy profoundly so; and gratitude was no part of his emotion. He well understood that Florence was never susceptible to impulses of compassion n conflicts such as these; in fact, if there was warfare between them, experience had taught him to be warlest when she seemed kindest. He moved away from her, and went into another room where his condition was one of ental discomfort, though he looked for a while at the pictures in his great-uncle's copy of "Paradise Lost." These illustrations, by M. Gustave Dore, falled to ald in reassuring his troubled mind.

When Florence left, he impulsively accompanied her, maintaining a nerv ous silence as they compassed the short distance between Uncle Joseph's front gate and her own. There, how-ever, he spoke,

"Look here! You don't haf to go and believe everything that ole girl told you, do you?"

"No." said Florence heartily. "Well, look here," he urged, helpless but to repeat. "You don't haf to believe whatever it was she went and told you, do you?"

"What was it you think she told me, Herhert? "All that guff-you know. Well,

Attatever it was you said she told "I didn't," sald Florence. "I didn't say she told me anything at all."

"Well, she did, didn't she?"
"Why, no." Florence replied, light"She didn't say anything to me. Only I'm glad to have your opinion of her, how she's such a story-teller and everything!"

But Herbert had greater alarms than this, and the greater obscured the lidn't tell you, how'd you know it, then?" "How'd I know what?" "That—that big story about my ever

"Oh, about that!" Florence said, and swung the gate shut between them "Well, I guess it's too late to tell you tonight, Herbert; but maybe if you and that nasty little Henry Rooter de every single thing I tell you to, and do it just exackly like I tell you from this time on, why maybe—I only say

'maybe'—well, maybe I'll tell some day when I feel like it." She ran up the path, up the steps and roused the veranda, but paused before opening the door. Then shealled back to the waiting Herbert.

TUST love to snow all about it; I know he would. So, when I tell anybody about it I'll only tell just you and this other boy."

"What other boy?" Herbert de manded.

And her reply, thrilling through the darkness, left him paralytic with hor ror. "Wallie Torbin!"

. The next afternoon, about four o'clock, Herbert stood gloomily at the main entrance of Atwater & Rooter's newspaper building, awaiting his part ner. The other entrances were not only nailed fast, but massively bar ricaded; and this one (consisting of the ancient carriage-house doors, open ing upon a driveway through the yard) had recently been made effective as an instrument of exclusion A long and heavy plank leaned against the wall, near by, ready to be set in hook-shaped iron supports fastened to the finer sides of the doors; and when the doors were closed, with this great plank in place, a person inside the building might seem entitled to count upon the enjoyment of privacy except in case of earthquake, tornado or fire. In fact, the size of the plant and the substantial quality of the iros fastenings, could be looked upon from a certain viewpoint, as a heart felt compliment to the energy and peo sistence of Florence Atwater.

Herbert had been in no compile mentary frame of mind, however, when he devised the obstructions, not was he now in such a frame of mind He was deeply pessimistic in regard to his future, and also embarrassed is anticipation of some explanations is would be necessary to make to his would be necessary to make to his partner. He strongly hoped that Henry's regular after-school appear ance at the newspaper building would precede Florence's, because these ex-planations regulard both deliberation and tact, and he was convinced that it would be almost impossible to make them at all if Florence got there first. He understood that he was unfor

He understood that he was unfor tunately within her power; and he saw that it would be dangerous to place in operation for her exclusion from the building this new mechanism contrived with such hopeful care, and at a cost of two dollars and twenty-five cents, or nine annual subscriptions to the Oriole out of a present total of thirty-two. What he wished Henry to believe was that for some good reason, which Harbert had not yet been able to invent, it would be better to show Florence a little politeness. He had a desperate hope that he might find some diplomatic way to prevail on Henry to be as subservient to Florence as she had servient to Florence as she had seemed to demand, and he was deter-mined to touch any extremity of unveracity rather than permit the deto his partner's knowledge. Henry Rooter was not Wallie Torbin; but in possession of material such as this he could easily make himself intoler, able. Here was a strange human Called, strange yet common to most minds brooding in fear of publicity. We seldom real a that the people whose derision we fear may have been as imprudent as we have been.

Therefore, it was in a flurried state of wind that Herbert waited; and when his friend appeared, over the fence, his perturbation was not decreased. He even failed to notice the unusual gravity of Henry's manner.

"Hello, Henry: I th ought I wor start in work till you got here. I didn't want to haf to come all the way downstairs again to open the door and hist our good ole plank up

"I see," said Henry glancing ner vously at their good ole plank. "Well, I guess Florence'll never get in this good ole door-that is, if we don't let her, or something."

This final clause would have sur prised Herbert if he had been less preoccupled with his troubles. "You bet able won't!" he said mechanically. "She couldn't ever get in hore again if the family didn't go intafering around and give me the dickens and everything, because they think-they say they do, anyhow—they say they think—they think—"

He paused, diaguising a little choke as a cough of scorn for the family's thinking.

"What did you say your family think?" Heary saked absently. "Well, they say we ought to let her have a share in our newspaper."

Again he peused, afraid to continue test his hypocrisy appear so barefaced as to lead toward suspicion and discovery. "Well, maybe we ought," he said, his eyes guilely upon his toe, which slowly scuffed the ground. "I don't say we ought,"

He expected at least a burst of out-raged protest from his partner, who, on the contrary, pleasantly astonlined him. "Well, that's the way I look at ft," Henry said. "I don't say we ought, and I don't say we oughtn't."

And he, likewise, stared at the toe of his own right shoe, which was also scuffing the ground. Herbert feet a fittle better; this subdivision of his difficulties seemed to be working out with surprising ea.se.

"I don't say we will and I don't say we won'k," Henry added. "That's the way I look at it. My father and .. mother are always talkin' to me; how I got to be polite and everything, and I guess maybe it's time I began to pay some 'tention to what they say, You don't have your father and moth-er for always woo know.
