HAVE YOU MEASURED YOURSELF BY YOUR HEAD? By JANE HILL

Was there ever a woman in the world who couldn't recall, sometime, somewhere, a sombre hour spent alone, in front of her mirror wishing she were different?

Maybe it was a lonesome evening at a dance that sent her mirrorward at midnight. Maybe it was her third invitation to be bridesmaid. Maybe it was an utterly frank family. Maybe it was just a man's eyes.

If she was really plain, she hated herself-top to toe-stormily, defiantly, drearily, hopelessly, according to her age and temperament. If she was just the average girl, she loathed her insignificant nose, or that mole on her chin, or the color of her skin, her fat ankles or whatever special un-beauty spot she thought she carried in the forefront of the impression she made. Even Cleopatra, you may be sure, yearned in such an hour for something she hadn't been born with and dreamed that Antony would have been just a speck more devoted if she'd had it!

You, yourself? Certainly, certainly. We're all alike in that sombre hour. It's a racial heritage. But we divide-simply, inevitably, forever and ever-into two groups for the hour that comes

> Last year there was but one car in the race Willard equipped that of Jimmy Murphy, the winner. This year out of the ten who finished within the money, seven carried Willard batteries. This was indeed a great victory for this battery.

> The Indianapolis classic is the most gruelling test that can be imagined, not only for the drivers and their cars, but also for the storage battery. In the constant bumping and banging of the car in the 50 miles of the race the storage battery must continue functioning, giving its eight sparks for every revolution of the powerful engines. The winning car was driven at an engine speed of 5600 revolutions a minute, requiring the Willard battery to supply 44,800 sparks per minute. Thus the battery on the winning car was required to furnish approximately a half million sparks, a truly remarkable performance, considering that no generator is carried on a racing car to recharge the battery.

Where Quality Counts Above Everything Else

Quality is more important in an enclosed car than in most any other product in daily use.

Regardless of price, it is not economy to buy a makeshift job in which the quality is skimped and cheapened at every turn. Paint, imitation leather and fibre board too often cover serious structural defects and cotton-and-wool trimming cloths are short lived. The chances are that the buyer will more than pay the difference later - in higher upkeep cost, frequent repairs and excessive depreciation.

The price of the Light-Six Sedan is the lowest at which it is possible to obtain a substantial, high grade hardwood and steel body, upholstered in mohair, in combination with a chassis of proved dependability and performance.

Studebaker's South Bend plants build more high quality closed bodies than those of any other automobile manufacturer and consequently overhead costs are reduced and the price to the customer is low.

The in-built quality of the Light-Six Sedan is evident the moment one gets behind the wheel, and is appreciated far more after twenty-five or thirty thousand miles of service.

The Light-Six Sedan, with its sturdy four-door body, its improved L-head motor, and the excellence of its chassis, combines distinction of appearance with a reliability of performance, a degree of comfort and economy of operation unknown in any other car at anywhere near its price.

BANKING FACILITIES, MANUFACTUR-ING AND INDUSTRIAL ENTERPRISES

BRADY'S FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS HAVE AMPLE CAPI-TAL FOR REQUIREMENTS OF TOWN AND COUNTRY AND PERSONNEL INCLUDES LEADING CITIZENS.

The banks of a community are the barometers of its business life and Brady's banks amply reflect the substantial class of citizenship that makes up the town and country, and as well the general prosperity of this section. The individual responsibility of the officers and directors of these two institutions mounts up into the millions of dollars, and no community is blessed with banks builded upon a more solid foundation than are these. Brady's manufacturing and industrial enterprises also indicate a great volume of business that has steadly grown with the town's progress and development. The following brief outlines will surprise and hold the attention of even the most casual reader, and are well worth careful and thoughtful study.

Black-Draught Found Valuable by a Texas Farmer, Who Has Known Its Usefulness Over 30 Years.

Naples, Texas.—"I have used Thedford's Black-Draught for years—I can safely say for more than 30 years," declares Mr. H. H. Cromer, a substantial, well-known farmer, residing out from here on Route 3.

"I am 43 years old, and wnen a small boy I had indigestion and was puny and my folks gave me a liver regulator. Then Black-Draught was advertised and we heard of it.

"I began to take Black-Draught, and have used it, when needed, ever since. I use Black-Draught now in my home, and certainly recommend it for any liver trouble.

"I have given it a thorough trial, and after thirty years can say Black-Draught is my stand-by. It has saved me many sick spells."

Mr. Cromer writes that he is "never out of Black-Draught," and says several of his neighbors prefer it to any other liver medicine: "I always recommend Black-Draught to my friends," he adds.

This valuable, old, powdered liver medicine is prepared from medicinal roots and herbs, and has none of the bad effects so often observed from the use of calomel, or other powerful mineral drugs.

A VICTORY for AMERICAN MOTORISTS The Crude Rubber Monopoly weakened

when it came into contact with aroused public sentiment. The press of the country today reflects the determination of the American motorist that tire prices shall stay at a reasonable level—and that America must produce its own rubber.

rirestone Cuts Tire Prices 10% Effective June 11

We announce a 10% reduction in tires and tubes effective June 11th. The lowered cost of crude rubber and the special Firestone manufacturing and distribution advantages make this possible.

Firestone factories are organized on a basis of large volume and effective production. Costs are down but quality is at its peak. Stockholder workmen are daily building many thousands of Gum-Dipped Cords-the best tire Firestone ever produced and, we believe, the leader on the market today.

Firestone Cords took the first four places and eight of the ten money positions in the Indianapolis Sweepstakes, May 30th, without a single tire failure.

Firestone Gum - Dipped Cords have set new standards in mileage, traction, comfort and safety. Car-owners have expressed their approval of the extra value in Firestone Gum-Dipped Cords by increasing their purchases 194% in the past six months.

We have replaced many expensive branches with warehouses. We now have 108 distributing points which are delivering Firestone tires to the consumer at the lowest cost in our history.

CITY HEALTH OFFICER PUTS O. K. ON MODEL DAIRY=

The following letter from Dr. J. B. Granville, City Health officer, following an inspection of the Model Dairy, speaks for itself and should be sufficient recommendation to assure anyone of the purity and cleanliness of our products.

It you want to be sure that your children are getting pure milk, handled in a perfectly sanitary manner and from a herd of cows that have

The letter reproduced here was written by City Health officer, Granville after he had, uninvited, made a thorough inspection of our dairy, and it gives the public absolute assurance as to the cleanliness of our products.

Upon this basis we solicit your patronage.

J. B GRANVILLE, M. D. BRADY, TEXAS

June 5, 1923

Mr. C. L. Roberts, Prop. Model Dairy, Brady, Texas. Dear Sir:-

I have today made an inspection of your dairy and find that you are meeting the health requirements governing the handling of milk and milk products. It is also pleasing to the eye to note the inviting appearance given by a coating of lime to the premises.

I am also informed that your herd has met the tests for tuberculosis. It io gratifying to note that these health measures have been instituted on your own volition and not through coercion from the City Health Department.

AND BROTHERS. HARPER

SYNOPSIS

PROLOGUE.—Seeking gold in the desert, "Cameron," solitary prospector, forms a partnership with an unknown man whom he later learns is Jonas Warren, father of a girl whom Cameron wronged, but later married, back in Illinois. Cameron's explanations appease Warren, and the two proceed together. Taking refuge from a sandstorm in a cave, Cameron discovers gold, but too late; both men are dying. Cameron leaves evidence, in the cave, of their discovery of gold, and personal documents.

CHAPTER I.—Richard Gale, adventurer, in Casita, Mexican border town, meets George Thorne, lieutenant in the Ninth cavalry, old college friend. Thorne tells Gale he is there to save Mercedes Castaneda, Spanish girl, his afflanced wife, from Rojas, Mexican bandit.

CHAPTER II.—Gale "roughhouses" Rojas and his gang, with the help of two American cowboys, and he, Mercedes and Thorne escape. A bugle call from the bort orders Thorne to his regiment. He leaves Mercedes under Gale's pro-

CHAPTER III.—The pair, aided by the cowboys who had assisted Gale in the escape, Charlie Ladd and Jim Lash, arrive in safety at a ranch known as Forlorn River, well across the border.

CHAPTER IV.-The fugitives are at Tom Belding's home. Belding is immigration inspector. Living with him are his wife and stepdaughter, Nell Burton, Gale, with Ladd and Lash, take service with Belding as rangers, Gale telling Belding the cause of his being a wanderer, a misunderstanding with his father concerning the son's business abilities.

CHAPTER V.—Mercedes gets word to Thorne of her safety. Dick also writes to his parents, informing them of his whereabouts. Nell's personality, and her kindness, attract Gale.

CHAPTER VI.—Riding the range Gale falls in with a party of three Mexican raiders encamped at a water hole. Watching his opportunity to oust them, he sees two Indians ride into the camp. One of them, a Yaqui, is evidently badly wounded, and the Mexicans seek to kill him in a cruel way. Dick drives them off, conveying the wounded Yaqui to Belding's ranch.

CHAPTER VII.—The Indian is taken in, cared for and remains in Belding's services, becoming Dick's ardent admirer, Gale's admiration for Nell increases, and he believes she is not averse to his attentions. Belding's horses, thoroughbreds, the pride of his life, after his wife and stepdaughter, are run off by Mexicans.

CHAPTER VIII.—Gale, with Ladd, Lash and the Yaqui, pursue the raiding party ever the desert, finally cornering them. Five of the six thieves are killed and the party of whites, with the recovered horses, return to the ranch in triumph.

CHAPTER IX.—Gale secures from Mrs. Belding what he feels is reluctant permission to allow him to seek Nell for a wife. He begins his courtable with energy confident that he can win her.

confident that he can win her.

CHAPTER X.—Not getting word from Thorne, whose period of army service has expired, Mercedes loses heart. Nell, although forbidden, rides to Casita to seek information of him. She finds he is a prisoner of Rojas, and is instrumental in effecting his escape, bringing him to Mercedes at Belding's ranch. Thorne and Mercedes are married. Rojas, with a large force of raiders, appears at Belding's and demands Mercedes be surrendered to, him. Fearing their ability to stand off the bandits, it is arranged that the three rangers, with the Yaqui as guide, and Thorne, convey Mercedes across the desert to Yuma, where she will be in safety. The party sets out.

CHAPTER XI.—They find the way to Yuma blocked by their enemies and are forced to take to the lava beds. Rojas, with his men, overtake them, but the Yaqui, familiar with the country, is con-fident they can beat him off.

"Shore he's headin' for that high place," said Ladd. "He's going slow now. There, he's stopped behind some choyas. He's gettin' up-no, he's . Now what the h-1!"

"Laddy, take a peek at the side of that lava ridge," sharply called Jim. "I guess mebbe somethin' ain't comin off. See! There's Rojas an' his outfit climbin'. Don't make out no hosses, Dick, use your glass an' tell us what's doin'. I'll watch Yaqui an'

tell you what his move means." Clearly and distinctly, almost as if he could have touched them. Gale had Rojas and his followers in sight. They were toiling up the rough lava on "They're almost up now," Gale was "There! They halt on top. I see Rojas. He looks wild. By ---- fellows, an Indian! It's a Paparo, Belding's old herder! The Indian points—this way—then down. He's showing Rojas the lay of the trail." "Boys, Yaqui's in range of that bunch," said Jim, swiftly, "He's raisin' his rifle slow-Lord, how stow . He's covered someone, Which one I can't say. But I think he'll pick Roias." "The Yaqui can shoot. He'll pick Rojas," added Gale, grimly.

"Rojas-yes-yes!" cried Thorne, in passion of suspense.

"Not on your life!" Ladd's voice cut in with scorn. "Gentlemen, you can gamble Yaou!'ll kill the Papago. That traitor Indian knows these sheep haunts. He's tellin' Rojas-"

A sharp rifle shot rang out. "Laddy's right," called Gale. The Papago's bit-his arm falls. There, he tumbles."

More shots rang out. Yaqui was seen standing erect firing rapidly at the darting Mexicans. For all Gale could make out no second bullet took Rolling and his men v behind the bulge of lava. The Yaqui deliberately backed away from his position. He made no effort to run or tent that he aimed and fired. The first Greaser huddled low, let his carbine go clattering down, and then crawled behind the rim. The second and third jerked back. The fourth seemed to flop up over the crest of lava. A dark arm reached for him, clutched his leg. tried to drag him up. It was in vain. Swift as lightning Gale whirled. "Laddy! I thought you were done for," cried Gale, with a break in his

"Sure it's high, Laddy," replied Gale. gladly. "Went clear through, clean as a whistle!"

He tore a bandkerchief into two parts, made wads, and pressing them close over the wounds he bound them there with Ladd's scarf. "Laddy, I-I'm afraid Thorne's done for," whispered Gale. "He's lying over there in that crack. I can see part of him. He doesn't move." "I was wonderin' if I'd have to tell you that. Dick, he went down hard hit, fallin', you know, limp an' soggy. It was a mortal cinch one of us would get it in this fight: but G-d! I'm sorry Thorne had to be the man.' "Laddy, maybe he's not dead," replied Gale. He called aloud to his friend. There was no answer.

Ladd got up, and, after peering keenly at the height of lava, he strode swiftly across the space. It was only a dozen steps to the crack in the lava where Thorne had fallen in head first. Ladd bent over, went to his knees, so that Gale saw only his head. Then he appeared rising with arms round the cavalryman. He dragged him across the hole to the sheltered corner that alone afforded protection. He had scarcely reached it when a carbine cracked and a bullet struck the flinty lava, striking sparks, then singing into the air.

Thorne was either dead or unconscious, and Gale, with a contracting throat and numb heart, decided for the former. Not so Ladd, who probed the bloody gash on Thorne's temple, and then felt his breast.

"He's alive an' not bad hurt. That bullet hit him glancin'. Shore them steel bullets are some lucky for us. Dick, you needn't look so glum. I tell you he ain't bad hurt. I felt his skull with my finger. There's no hole in it. Wash him off an' tie- Wow! did you get the wind of that one? An' mebbe it didn't sing off the lava!" It was indeed a joy to Gale to find that Thorne had not received a wound necessarily fatal, though it was serious enough. Gale bathed and bound it, and laid the cavalryman against the slant of the bank, his head high to lessen the probability of bleeding. As Gale straightened up Ladd muttered low and deep, and swung the heavy rifle around to the left. Far along the slope a figure moved. Ladd began to work the lever of the Winchester and to shoot. At every shot Gale saw the bullets strike the lava behind, beside, before the fleeing Mexican, sending up dull puffs of dust. On the sixth shot he plunged down into seeking cover. "Dick, mebbe there's one or two left above; but we needn't figger much on it," said Ladd, as, loading the rifle. he jerked his fingers quickly from the hot breech. "Listen! Jim an' Yaqui are hittin' it up lively down below. I'll sneak down there. You stay here an' keep about half an eye peeled up yonder, an' keep the rest my way."

out of sight, either hit or frightened

There seemed a lull in the battle. Gale ventured to stand high, and, screened behind choyas, he swept the three-quarter circle of lava with his glass. In the distance he say horses, but no riders. Below him, down the slope along the crater rim and the trail, the lava was bare of all except tufts of choya. Gale gathered assurance. It looked as if the day was favoring his side. Then Thorne, coming partly to consciousness, engaged Gale's care. The cavalryman stirred and moaned, called for water, and ter of his own position, and dreading then for Mercedes. Gale held him hide. Presently he turned and came to look at him, took up the heavy back with a strong hand, and present-ty be was once more quiet.

Suddenly harsh, prolonged yells brought Gale to his feet. Far down the trails where the crater rims closed in the deep fissure he saw moving forms. They were three in number. Two of them ran nimbly across the lava bridge. The third staggered far behind. It was Ladd. He appeared hard hit. He dragged at the heavy rifle, which he seemed unable to raise. The yells came from him. He was calling the Yaqui. Gale's heart stood still momentar

Here, then, was the catastrophe! He hardly dared sweep that fissure with his glass. The two fleeing figtres halted-turned to fire at Ladd. Gale recognized the foremost onesmall, compact, gaudy-Rojas! The bandit's arm was outstretched. Puffs of white smoke rose, and shots rapped out. When Ladd went down Rojas threw his gun aside and with a wild yell bounded over the lava. His companion followed.

A tide of passion, first hot as fire, then cold as ice, rushed over Gale when he saw Rojas take the trail toward Mercedes' hiding-place. The little bandit appeared to have the sure-footedness of a mountain sheep. The Mexican following was not so sure or fast. He turned back. Gale heard the trenchant bark of the .405. Ladd was kneeling. He shot againagain. The retreating bandit seemed to run full into an invisible obstacle, then fell lax, inert, lifeless. Rojas sped on unmindful of the spurts of dust about him. Yaqui, high above Ladd, was also firing at the bandit. Then both rifles were emptied. Rojas turned at a high break in the trail. He shook a defiant hand, and his exulting yell pealed faintly to Gale's ears. About him there was something desperate, magnificent. Then he clambered down the trail.

Ladd dropped the .405, and rising, gun in hand, he staggered toward the bridge of lava. Before he had crossed it Yaqui came bounding down the slope, and in one splendid leap he cleared the fissure. He ran beyond the trail and disappeared on the lava above. Rojas had not seen this sudden, darting move of the Indian.

Gale wondered, fearfully, what had become of Lash. Presently, when Rojas came out of the cracks and ruts of lava there might be a chance of disabling him by a long shot. His progress was now slow. But he was making straight for Mercedes' hidingplace. What was it leading him there -an eagle eye, or hate, or instinct? Why did he go on when there could be no turning back for him on that trail? Ladd was slow, heavy, staggering on the trail; but he was relentless. Only death could stop the ranger now. Surely Rojas must have known that when he chose the trail. From time to time Gale caught glimpses of Yaqui's dark figure stealing along the higher rim of the crater. He was making for a point above the Ladd staggered along the trail; a times he crawled. The Yaqui gained; he might have had wings; he leaped from jagged crust to jagged crust; his sure-footedness was a wonderful thing.

But for Gale the marvel of that endless period of watching was the purpose of the bandit Roias. He had now no weapon. Gale's glass made this fact plain. There was death behind him, death below him, death before him, and though he could not have known it, death above him. He never faltered-never made a misstep upon the narrow, flinty trail. When he reached the lower end of the level ledge Gale's polgnant doubt became a certainty. Rojas had seen Mercedes. It was incredible, yet Gale believed it. Then, his heart clamped as in an icy vise, Gale threw forward the Remington, and sinking on one knee, began to shoot. He emptied the magazine. Puffs of dust near Rojas did not even make him turn.

Gale wheeled, rigid now, steeling himself to one last forlorn hope-that Mercedes could defend herself. She had a gun. He doubted not at all that she would use it. But, remembering her terror of this savage, he feared for her. Rojas reached the level of the ledge. He halted. He crouched. It was the act of a panther. Mani festly he saw Mercedes within the cave. Then faint shots patted the air, broke in quick echo. Rojas went down as if struck by a heavy blow He was hit. But even as Gale yelled in sheer madness the bandit leaned erect. He seemed too aulck, too sup ple to be badly wounded. A slight, dark figure flashed out of the cave. Mercedes! She backed against the Gale saw a puff of whiteheard a report. But the bandit lunged at her. Mercedes run not to try to pass him, but straight for the precipice. Her intention was plain, But Rojas outstripped her, even as she reached the verge. Then a piercing scream pealed across the cratera scream of despair.

Gale closed his eyes. He could not bear to see more.

Thorne echoed Mercedes' scream Gale looked round just in time to leap and catch the cavalryman as he staggered, apparently for the steep slope. And then, as Gale dragged him back ooth fell. Gale saved his friend, but he plunged into a choya. He drew his hands away full of the great glistening cones of thorns.

"For God's sake, Gale, shoot Shoot! Kill her! Kill her! Can't-you-see-Rojas-"

Thorne fainted.

Gale, stunned for the instant, stood with uplifted hands, and gazed from Thorne across the crater. Rojas had not killed Mercedes. He was overpowering her. His actions seemed slow, wearing, purposeful. Hers were violent. Lake a trapped she-wolf, Mercedes mas fighting. She tore,

Rojas' intention was terribly plain. In agony now, both mental and physical, cold and sick and weak, Gole gripped his rifle and aimed at the struggling forms on the ledge. He pulled the trigger. When he passed off the ledge Rojas was edging farther and farther along the wall. He was clinging now to the lava, creeping inch by inch. Perhaps he had thought to work around the tuttress or climb over it.

Evidently he went as far as possible, and there he clung, an unscalable wall above, the abyss beneath. The approach of the Yaqui was like a slow dark shadow of gloom. If it seemed so to the stricken Gale what must it have been to Rojas? He appeared to sink against the wall. The Yaqui stole closer and closer. He was the savage now, and for him the moment must have been glorified. Gale saw him gaze up at the great circling walls of the crater, then down into the depths. CHAPTER XIII

Changes at Forlorn River. The first of March saw the federal occupation of the garrison at Casita. After a short, decisive engagement the rebels were dispersed into small bands and driven eastward along the boundary line toward Nogales.

It was the destiny of Forlorn River, however, never to return to the slow, sleepy tenor of its former existence. Belding's predictions came true. That straggling line of home-seekers was but a forerunner of the real invasion of Altar valley. Refugees from Mexico and from Casita spread the word that water and wood and grass and land were to be had at Forlorn River; and as if by magic the white tents and red adobe houses sprang up to glisten in the sun. Belding was happier than he had been for a long time. He believed Standard.

that evil days for Forforn River along with the apathy and lack of enterprise, were in the past. He hired a couple of trustworthy Mexicans to ride the boundary line, and he settled down to think of ranching and irrigation and mining projects. Every morning he expected to receive some word from Sonoyta or Yuma, telling him that Yaqui had guided his party safely across the desert.

Among the many changes coming to pass in Forlorn River were the installing of post office service and the building of a mescal drinking-house. Belding had worked hard for the post office, but he did not like the idea of a saloon for Forlorn Miver. Stall, that was an inevitable evil. The Mexicans would have mescal. A good many Americans drifted into Forlorn River-miners, cowboys, prospectors, outlaws, and others of nondescript character; and these men, of course, made the saloon, which was also an inn, their headquarters. Belding, with Carter and other old residents, saw Rojas fought the girl. It sank in a the need of a sheriff for Forlorn River.

One morning early in this spring month, while Belding was on his way from the house to the corrals, he saw cheked. Utterance became impossible. Nell running Blanco Jose down the road at a gait that amazed bim. She did not take the turn of the road to come in by the gate. She put Jose at a four-foot wire fence, and came

It did not take more than half an eye for Belding to see that she was "Nell, what's come off now?" asked

"I'm not going to tell you." she replied, and started away, leading Jose toward the corral. Belding leisurely followed. She went into the corral, removed Jose's bridle, and led him to the wateringtrough. Belding came up, and without saying anything began to unbuckle Jose's saddle girths. But he ventured a look at Nell. The red had gone from her face, and he was surprised to see her eyes brimming with tears. Most assuredly this was not one of Nell's tantrums. While taking off Jose's saddle and hanging it in the shed Belding pondered in his slow way. When he came back to the corral Nell had her face against the bars, and she was crying. He slipped a big arm around her and waited.

"Dad, I don't want you to think me a-a baby any more," she said. "I've been insulted.'

With a specific fact to make clear thought in Belding's mind he was never slow.

"I knew something unusual had come off. I guess you'd better tell

> "Not to mention it to mother, not to pack a gun down there, and never, never tell Dick." Belding was silent. Seldom did he

> "Well, I promise not to tell mother," he said, presently: "and seeing you're here safe and well, I guess I won't go packing a gun down there, wherever that is. But I won't promise to keep anything from Dick that perhaps he ought to know."

Nell, regaining her composure, wiped her eyes and smoothed back her hair. "The other day, Wednesday," she began, "I was coming home, and in ont of that mescal drinking there was a crowd. It was a noisy crowd. I didn't want to walk out into the street or seem afraid. But I had to do both. There were several young men, and if they weren't drunk they certainly were rude. I never saw them before, but I think they must belong to the mining company that was run out of Sonora by rebels. Any. way, these young fellows were Amer-Icans. They stretched themselves across the walk and smiled at me. 1 had to go out in the road. One of them, the rudest, followed me. He was a big fellow, red-faced, with promtnent eyes and a bold look. He came up beside me and spoke to me. I ran home. And as I ran I heard his companions jeering.

"Well, today, just now, when I was riding up the valley road I came upon the same fellows. They had instruments and were surveying. Remembering Dick, and how he always wished for an instrument to help work out his plan for irrigation, I was certainly surprised to see these strangers surveying-and surveying upon Laddy's plot of land. It was a sandy road there, and Jose happened to be walking. So I reined in and asked these engineers what they were doing. The leader, who was that same bold fellow who had followed me, seemed much pleased at being addressed. He said he was glad to tell me he was going to run water all over Altar valley. Dad, you can bet that made me wild. That was Dick's plan, his discovery, and here were surveyors on Laddy's claim.

"Then I told him that he was working on private land and he'd better get off. He said something about not seeing any squatters on the land, and then he shut up tight on that score, But he began to be flirty again. He got hold of Jose's bridle, and before I could catch my breath he said I was a peach, that he wanted to make a date with me, that his name was Chase, that he owted a gold mine in Mexico. He said a lot more I didn't gather, but when he called me 'Dearie' I-well, I lost my temper.
