New Telephone Is Introduced by Bell

A new telephone, small, light, and oval-shaped, was introduced July 1. Called the Princess, this oval-shaped telephone is about one-third smaller and two pounds lighter than present desk model telephones, according to manager "Rusty" Lummus, of the Southwestern Bell Telephone Co.

The manager said Bell Telephone Laboratory scientists worked five years developing the compact size and style of the telephone. It is two inches lower and five inches smaller from front to back than current desk model phones.

"Because of its small base, Bell Laboratories engineers had to reduce the size of the complex dial and switch equipment and the wiring in the Princess, Lummus said. He added that the new telephone came in five colors white, pink, blue, beige, and turquoise. The Princess also has an illumniated dial so calls can be made in the dark. This light can be switched on to glow softly as a night light when the telephone is not in use.
