RETRIBUTION

A LEAF FROM FRENCH HISTORY. During the campa gn of 1800 the French army, destined to meet the power of Austria on the plains of Italy, before it could render itself master of Turin and of Milan, penetrate even to the walls of Genoa, and declare the termsof peace on the battlefield of Marengo, had yet to surmount that vast Alpine barries which extends from the St. Bernard to Nice and Montenotte, and to overcome a series of tremendous obstacles, presenting themselves one after another in scemingly endless succession, and tasking to the utmost, if not defying the courage of the troops and the military genius and perseverance of theleaders. These obstacles were not merely the result of natural position; there were instances in which the resistance of the invaded was more obstinat and more terrible than that of mountains, precipices or rivers. Protected by fortifications of little strength or difficulty, and butvery inefficiently aided by a locality which yielded but few means or opportunities of vigorous defencebut sustained by an indomi, table courage, great resource of inventionand an enthusia-tic love of country, infinitely more formidable than their courage and their skill, the inhabitants of the small town and citadel of Ivree, with a garrison of four thousand Austrian soldiers and twentyfive pieces of cannon, maintained their post for three days against an army of forty thousand call forth a solution of her doubts. nen, commanded by the three youngest, but already most illustrious generals in Europe—Massena, Lannes and Bernadotte. Furious at seeing his march thus arrested before this insignificant little place, he who had taken Alexandria in a day, and Cairo in an hour, and impatient, moreover, to assume hispositions for the investments of Milan, the military execution just accomplished. commander-in-chief, on the 25th of May, 1800, ordered the division of General Lannes to march upon the village in all its force, and take it by assault. Then turning to the officers who had accompanied him to the spot, and reverently baring his head before the body of the victim, he said to them :

"Unite with me, gentlemen, in rendering tribute of respect to unfortunate courage—to a brave and fallen enemy."

The remainder of that dreadful day was pa sed by Madame H. in the bitterness of grief. After witnessing the interment of her husband with military honors, this unhappy woman, who had lost, in a single moment, and under rircumstances of such peculiar hos was therefore more astonished than alarmed when early next morning, a French aide-decamp waited upon her with a request from the commander-inchief that shewould repair mediately to his quarters at the Hotel de Ville. Without a word of inquiry or remon-strance, she arose, took her child in her arms and followed the messenger to the General.

Led to the council chamber at the moment of her arrival, Madame H. found herself surrounded by all the glories of the Republican army; by those celebrated men for whom such destinies were reserved; by whom crownswere to bewon and lost, and of whom in after years, so manywere to lose on battlefields, amid the intrigues of cabinets or the corruptions of a court, the honor for wifich they were now panting, or the lives they were now so ready to peril in its winning. There were Murat, Duroc, Lannes, Desaix, Massena. Hoche and Bernadotte; and in the mid-t of them the General, who, with arms folded on his breast, and his eye fixed upon the floor, walked slowly to and fro, as if in deep and On the entrance of Madame H.he stopped abruptly, motioned her to be seated, and then, after gazing for a moment on the face of her child, with a gentle smile of interest and affection, resumed his walk. Madame H. began to feel alarm. This unexpected summons, this strange reception, the silence that prevailed around her, all combined, first to surprise and then to terrify her. A vague scusation of anxiety and fear oppressed her heart, and she could not command her nerves for the utterance of a single word that might All at once the roll of a drum, at a little distance, startled her from her painful reveries. It was quicklyfollowed by a volley of musketry, and the General, pausing in his walk, placed his hand upon her arm and led her to the window, from which she beheld in the square below the fearful spectacle of a "Look, madam," he said in a calm, yet impressive tone; "the man whom you see lying dead upon the ground was a French officer whom his comrades in arms h .ve co. demned to death for the assassination of an Austran.

EXAMPLES OF PRODICIOUS MEMORY.;

A CONDUCTOR must have a prodigious usical memory if he can, as Herr Richter usually does, conduct such a score by heart, never forgetting to beckon to any instrument at the very second wanted. I say a prodigious musical memory, because the faculty of remembering is by no means a general but a special one. One man may, as Richter for instance, know a number of scores by heart, another may be able to keep an incredible number of figures in his remembrance, and not be able to retain the smallest musical motif. The Emperor Napoleon III., who never forgot a man he had once spoken to, could so little remember a musical theme that you could have played the same thing twice over to him and given it two different names, and he never would have known it. An example of the most astounding memory is the winner of the National Chess Tournament, Mr. Zuckertort. He is capable not only of playing a game of chess by heart, i.e., without ever looking at his board, but being told his adversary's move, instantly replying with his counter-move and keeping the position, however altered, in his head; but further, he played sixteen games at the same time the same way; that is to say, before each of sixteen tables sat a player with a board, and they informed him after each other of their respective moves; he replied, and never in the answer to this questionconfounded one position with another, one game with another, never made a false ove, but twice detected, where on purpose false moves were made to test him, the wrong direction. He performed an espe-cially curious feat in the house of a friend game of chess by heart with some one the adjoining room, and when the cards for whist were dealt, he looked once through his cards then put them away, and each time his turn came he mentioned the card he wished to play, all the while continuing his chess game, and never keeping either his chess or his whist partner waiting en-

To conclude

It is impossible to disguise the fact that the love of money is our national failing. To desire to Lrow rich, the wish to possers money, absorbs the American mind almost to the Moloch to whom we sacrifice health, time, honor and reputation. We throw all into the balance, even our immortal souls, and care not if we lose so that we gain the world. Money has been the root of our evil, and to grasp the glittering treasure, we have rathlessly trampled on what we once deemed sacred and precious. The church, the government, business, etc., all show the trail of this serpent, and it is time the watchman on the tower should warn the people of the danger ahead. We are drifting away from the strongholds of integrity, as a nation we are losing caste; let us eturn to the safe harbor of honesty and honor, before we make a total wreck of what is of more value than money -- our good name here and our immortal souls hereafter. The decay of Greece can be traced to the luxury of her people. It must not be said of future ages that America's decay was duc to her love of money

In order to please your customer and give entire satisfaction both buyer and seller must be protected in goods and prices. The only way to do this is for the the merchant to content himself with a small profit on his goods that will enable him to increase the volume of his business so he can realize more from the large amount of goods he sells than the large profit on his goods. As this has always been my policy and as it has given me as unprecedented business success in this country, I propose to still continue to it crease my business in the future as I have to call and examine the goods and prices. Being thankful for the increased patronage since the arrival of my mammoth Spring stock, by making goods an I prices as you like it, I hope to merit your trade. Yours truly.
