He has rented 1500 acres of land just over the line in New Mexico and will plant the entire tract in wheat. He will move to the land shortly after the first of the year and begin the preparation of it for seeding to his wheat next fall. He now has about 209 acres of it in wheat which is up and looking fine.

About half of this tract of land is already in cultivation while the other half is virgin sod. This remaining sod will all be broken out and kept in proper condition for seeding when the time comes next fall. Mr. Hines will no longer use horses and mules as his motive power in his wheat crop but will use tractor power exclusively. He already owns one tractor and will buy two more as soon as he locates on the land. With this end in view he has advertised for sale all of his teams, harness and farming implements. See his halfpage ad in this issue of the Star.

They Rush to Burn Stadium; Mayor Hit With Club.

Evanston, Ill .- A few black eyes, cracked heads, and soiled police uniforms, and some damaged fire equipment, were all that was left to remind the university town of Evanston of how its dignity was ruffled recently when 3,000 Northwestern university students allowed their exuberant spirits to spill over in celebration of the Purple football team's prowess.

Town officials, incensed at the burning of an unoccupied fraternity house, the lighting of huge bonfires, in the business district, and several pitched battles between students and firemen and policemen, said they expected to arrest the ring leaders if they found them. Meanwhil four studnts who had been arrested were released because the police said they were not the ring leaders.

University officials said they favored the celebration, but frowned on the destruction of property or the violation of the town's laws.

Mayor Charles H. Bartlett, who was clouted on the head while trying to help the police quiet the stuthe Texas prison population to 3,642 dents, announced he expected to turn ways and means committee was dein a bill to the university for damages done city property.

Spokesmen for student organizations maintained there would have been no trouble if the police had not i stop the celebration.

Washington, D. C .- An echo of the prolonged controversy within the war department as to the probable value in war of fixed anti-aircraft defenses found its way into the annual report of Maj. Gen. Mason M. Patrick, chief of the army air service.

General Patrick disclosed that the air service itself had made "a very complete study" of the department's anti-aircraft defense project which had been submitted to the department for its information.

The surest defense against aircraft is other aircraft, he declared. Great care should be exercised that the limited appropriations shall be spent to provide the greatest protection possible.

In the last year, he declared, much had been done to better the air service, its training and its equipment.

CHAPTER XX-Continued

Brand Fair heard it in the strange dark passage far down in the heart of Mystery ridge. Rod Stone, climbing the stiff slopes, heard it, and so did the boy on the staggering horse a little farther over toward Sky Line. He altered bis course a bit toward the west.

"What do you mean?" said Arnold sharply, "would you kill her before she signs the paper? Or after-and have the finger of the law point at the new owner of the flats? Use your wits."

"Kill her-and the old woman will take the boy and go," said Kate, "she's the stubborn element. I warn you now-she must never go out of this place alive. She knows me now,"

"Unless she goes down the Pipe with this morning's drive-the boys should soon be here to start."

"She will come back." "Not if I send Basford to take her over the Line."

"Enough!" said Kate, "I'm uneasy about the whole thing-the brushedout tracks at the mouth of the Pipe-"A triffe. And the boys will soon be here. Hark-they're coming now.' There was a sound in the rock face. a shout and a rumble of horses' feet hurrying.

The man and the woman looked that way-to behold Big Basford come boiling from the narrow opening with a string of men behind him.

"H-l's fire!" whispered Cattle Kate Like a Nemesis, Bossick and the ranchers behind him pushed Big Basford down the sloping floor of Rainbow's pot. "A plant!" screamed the latter,

"we're caught!! We're caught!" A hundred feet away Bossick stopped.

His angry eyes flashed over Arnold and the woman beside him, then scanned the green basin where the peaceful cattle lay. Bossick threw back his coat. A star shone faintly in the light.

"You can thank Sheriff Selwood's tireless work for this," he said, "and so can we. The whole country's deputized. Your work is known. You may as well give up without a fuss

He stopped, for an odd sound had secome apparent-a deep, echoing sound, as of many waters beating on a hollow shore.

The roar of waters became the rumble of hoofs and up from the bowels of the earth came Brand Fair and his "Good morning, Katherine Fair," he said.

"You!" screamed Cattle Kate. "You! You! It was you who did the tricknot that fool Selwood! I might have guessed!"

"Sure you might have guessed," he said. "When you and your paramour there robbed the Consolidated and wound the colls of guilt around Jack Fair-you might have guessed that his brother would follow you to the ends of the earth to get you. And he's got you-got you dead to rights."

He, too, showed a deputy's star. "Jack Fair died in prison-of shame and of a broken heart. For three years I worked in New York to get the goods on you, Arnold, and never could-definitely. Then I hired a better man who could-and did. I have a precious package in a safe place with enough proof in it to have sent you over long ago-but I wanted you both-together-a grand finale. It has been a long trail-long-for me-and for Sonny, the child whom you abandoned. Kate, five years ago.

"I've lived for months in Blue Stone eanyon. It was I who found where the willows blow out from the wall. It was Sheriff Selwood who took his life in his hand to help your men drive Bossick's steers into Rainbow cliff. It was all of us together, as you see us here, who put two and two together and determined to get you-and to get you good-you and all your outfit of rustlers-all of whom owe something to Lawrence Arnold yonder. We've picketed the mouth of your passage into Blue Stone and would have caught you there or rather at Marston, where I have had arrangements made for some time. We've been holding off for Selwood's word-he's worked too faithfully all these years to lose the credit now."

Not once had Fair taken his eyes from Kate Cathrew's face, else he night have seen the tragic figure by light. the wall at the right, the grotesque woman whose blood-stained features worked with hysterical laughter.

"Brother!" whispered Nance Allison to berself, "it was his brother-notuot-himself! Oh, Lord, I-thank Neither did he see the newcomers streaming through the cut into the basin—the men from Cordova under

There was one other actor in the small drama whom no one noticed-Bud Allison, on foot new, since Big Dan stood at the base of the last rise, completely done—Bud Allison dragging his lame foot wearily, his pappy's old gun on his shoulder.

The boy stood between the last riders and the wall, looking at them al with puzzled eyes. Brand Fair con-

"While we are about this we'll finish it completely. I want the men of Nameless and the Upper Country to know just what sort of criminals they have been dealing with-to know that Lawrence Arnold there is a clever New York lawyer who defends guilty men and frees them-by buying juries. That he is getting rich by selling fired. through agents and aids the cattle which you, Kate, steal here, drive into the river, up to the cliff, down this wonderful underground passage into Blue Stone canyon and out across the desert to Marston for the shipping. It has been an amazing system in a more amazing setting. The mystery of the steers that left no tracks is solved by the fact that every time you stole a big herd you drove them up the night before you drove your own brand down-therefore, they left no trace. Also, I want to say here and now before these witnesses, that all the money you brought with you into the Deep Heart hills belonged to poor Jack Fair, the father of your childthe man you betrayed into prison through the devilish legal trap laid by Lawrence Arnold-and that is why I've followed you. Sonny Fair has a right to his father's property-and I intend to see that he gets it. Have and dismounted.

you anything to say?" Lawrence Arnold, trapped and consclous of the fact, wet his thin lips and glanced desperately around. He saw only stern faces, cold and angry eyes. But Cattle Kate Cathrew was made of different stuff. She flung up her clenched fists and shook them at the clear skies where the rose of dawn was spreading.

"You-!" she swore, "I always hated your narrow eyes and that mouth of yours! So you are the prospector, Smith, who has been so inquisitive at Cordova!

"And it is you who've done all this! Oh, d-n your soul to h-11"

She dropped her hands, caught the rein hanging on Bluefire's neck, struck her heels to his flanks and quick as thought whirled him away toward the cut. The group between her and the entrance fell floundering apart before he stallion's charge.

With a dozen leaps she almost reached the wall.

"You can't get away with this, Brand Fair!" she screamed, "I'm a match for you!" and jerked at her rifle in its loops.

In her rage she was inept, so that the weapon caught, hindering her purpose for a moment.

Nance Allison, standing in her trampled spot, knew that the moment she had dreaded for so long was come. Knew that danger threatened at last some one whom she loved-the stark danger of death-and as if something with defiance. broke within her, the "stirrings" crystallized. Without taking her eyes from the frantic woman on the big blue horse, she began to feel with her foot for something in the grasssomething long and dark and cold, but which seemed to her now more preious and to be desired than anything apon the earth-namely, Sud Provine's

Her foot touched the rifle. She bent and took it up.

As Cattle Kate straightened in her saddle, Nance dropped stiffly to her knee and raised the gun.

Her blue eyes caught the sights and drew down steadily upon the woman's heart.

Just so had those forgotten Allisons drawn down upon their enemies in the Kentucky hills.

Her finger touched the trigger. And here the hand of destiny reached down-or was it the hand of God?-and ordered the puppets playing out their little tragedy in the heart of Rainbow cliff. As Kate Cathrew flung up her gun the furious rage that fired her stiffened body in the saddle, shot her bolt upright, standing in her stirrups.

Perhaps some unaccustomed pressure of her posture angered him-perhaps the excitement of the moment loosed something wild in his hybrid heart-perhaps it was something else. The bearded man from Upper

Country said afterward it was. At any rate, with the woman's specacular and dramatic action, Bluefire, the stallion, who hated her but obeyed her, gave one scream and rose with

From the peak of its arc the woman, good rider though she was, but taken by surprise, fell loose from her stirrups, cascading in a flare of booted feet straight down his hips and tail.

At the same moment two shots rang out-her own and Nance's both gone wild with Bluefire's interference.

Still on his hind feet, the stallio in the peaceful pot Then two men moved. McKane, the trader who leaped rom his horse and knelt by Kate Cathrew, and Big Basford who flung up his arms and shook his clawing fingers toward the western wall. "You killed her!" he shrieked, "You yellow devil-you've killed Kate Cathrew! And I'll kill you!"

He kicked his horse viciously and Big Basford toppled to the left and slid out of his saddle with an audible grunt. He rolled over, shook his good fist toward the serene skies, and was still. Slowly the group drew in to look at Cattle Kate lying so quietly after the storm.

McKane was holding her hand between his own and murmuring foolish, endearing words. Lawrence Arnold pushed him aside with an oath.

But Brand Fair turned his eyes for the first time toward that farther wall, For a moment he did not recognize the creature which knelt there, the smoking rifle across its knee, its face covered with both hands.

Then something familiar in the drooping shoulders, the ragged veil of shining hair, struck home to him. Without a word he went forward Incredulously he stooped and took the hands away.

Wide eved he looked at her. "Nance!" he cried in horror, "Nance-Nance! Good God Almighty! What's this?"

"I am forsaken of my God," said the girl piteously, "I had to kill her-or she'd have killed you!"

"You didn't," said Fair sharply, "the stallion killed her. Your shot went wild." She looked at him dully, uncompre-bending, and Fair repeated his words. As she realized their import her lips began to quiver, she rolled down upon the trampled grass with her face to the sod, and wept.

Brand Fair, knowing that this matter was between her soul and its Maker, wisely did not attempt to comfort her. He sat with his hand on her heav ing shoulder and watched the tragic scene. Bossick and his men surrounded Arnold. Big Basford was dead. And here was Nance Allison in Rainbow's pot at dawn, ghastly with blood and weariness. A thousand questions burned in his brain, but he waited. From the right Rod Stone was coming forward, followed by the halfbreed girl and the rest of the men from Cordova. Bossick took Stone into custody and called to Bud Allison, who came limping forward, his blue eyes glittering Fair stooped and lifting Nance bodily carried her into the beart of the "Men." he said, "here's something more to add to our score against Sky Line. Look!"

They looked in astonishment. "Great Scott!" sald Bossick wonderingly, "it's Miss Allison, ain't it?

What's she doing here?" "That's a question I'll ask Lawrence Arnold," said Fair in a voice like a blade, but the bearded man from the Upper Country spoke up promptly. "I think young Stone and Minnie Pine can answer that, since that is why we're here. Speak, Stone." The rider shook his head. "Let Minnie," he said, "she was first to know about it." All eyes turned to the Pomo girl, among those of Lawrence Arnold, still holding in his arms the body of Kate Cathrew, and they were cruel as a hawk's. "I listened," said Minnie calmly, "I always listened when there was devil's dark man who swung down and came talk at Sky Line. I've heard much. This time the Sun Woman yonder stood in the inner room where they had brought her, and gave back in their teeth the words of the boss and the master. They wanted her to sign her mother's name to a paper which would give to Kate Cathrew the homestead on Nameless-"

"Great Scott!" sald Bossick again. "She wouldn't." went on Minnie. "and so they gave her to Sud Provine to keep all night in Rainbow's pot, with Big Basford standing guard outside."

There was the sound of an indrawn breath from Fair.

"We know Provine, Rod Stone and me," continued the girl, "and so we went to Cordova for help to get her out. We had to walt so long to get away from Sky Line-"

"But they came, men," cut in the bearded man, "don't forget that in the final settlement. They dared Arnold and Cattle Kate to save a woman's honor-and that's no small thing."

"Shucks!" sald Stone disgustedly, "what would any halfman do?" Fair stood Nance upon her feet. She raised her unspeakable head and glanced at the tense faces.

"Where's this Provine? Tell us Nance," said Fair still in that thin, hard voice. He hitched his holster a little farther forward on his thigh. "I don't know," she said. "I tore his face to ribbons-I'd have killed him if I could. He crawled that way. She nodded toward the north. Fair loosed her gently and was said, "not he your condition. Jermyn -go see what you can find. In the meantime-there's Big Basford. The boy was quick-"

Here Rod Stone broke in, speaking frankly.

"I'd like to say, men, that when young Allison killed Big Basford he got the man who threw his father down Rainbow cliff and stretched the rope that lamed the boy. John Allison had found the only outside way to the rim and was looking down into the Pot here, when Basford went to meet him."

For a long moment there was silence. "It would seem to me," said Bossick slowly, "that there has been a deal of justice done here this daya very great deal of justice. It's destiny.'

Nance Allison looked up at him with a light in her blue eyes.

"It's the hand of God, Mr. Bossick," she said gravely, "no less."

The rancher nodded. "Maybe," he said, as Jermyn and several others who had accompanied bim, came back across the basin with Sud Provine among them. One look at the man was sufficient. "I guess he's had all that was com ing to him for the present," said Bossick grimly. "Take him along to the house. We'll go gather in the rest." And so, in the full day, with the risen sun touching all the tapestried slopes of Mystery with gold, Cattle Kate Cathrew went back to her stronghold under the tinted cliffwent in state with a retinue behind

She had died as she had lived, spectacularly, and her turbulent soul should have been satisfied. With her went one man who had loved her after his selfish fashion, another who would have crawled in the dust to kiss her feet, while a third, borne relling limply on a saddle, followed after more closely than any other.

The young cowboy from the Upper Country absent-mindedly rolled a cigarette.

"She was worth it," he said softly to the bearded man beside him, "in spite of all!"

"H-1!" said the other, "look you der! One square foot of his satin hide was worth her whole body! I always thought he'd get her, some time, some way. I'm going to dig up my last dollar an' buy him from whoever owns him now.

Bluefire stood against the cliff, watching with interested eyes this strange procession passing.

. . . . On the broad slopes, the towering slants, the conifers sang their everlasting song, tuned by the little winds from the south.

White clouds sailed the vault above leading their shadows for a little space upon the soft green country.

Another spring was smiling on the Deep Hearts kills. On the wide brown flats by Nameless the young crops were springing, vigor ous and safe, and some few herds browsed peacefully on the rugged range. In the doorway of the cabin by the river. Nance Fair sat with Sonny in her lap, watching the slope beyond,

"Won't Brand be coming soon?" the child wanted to know. "The Rainbow cliff is shining, so it's getting late."

"Soon--very soon, honey," said Nance smilingly, "I heard Dirk bark in the buck brush yonder a little while ago."

In the room beyond Mrs. Allison rocked contentedly.

"Nance." she said, "you know this here carpet always makes me think of the floor of the woods, somehow, with its brown an' white. It's so fresh an' fair an' soft.'

"That's why I got that warp," said Nance happily, "I felt it would-and it does so. Yes, it does so. Run, Sonny-yonder's Brand and Bud!" Brand and Bud, riding up from the waters of Nameless in the evening haze, Diamond and Buckskin drawing long breaths of satisfaction at the sight of home.

Nance rose and waited for the lean to her with Sonny on his shoulder. As he stooped to lay his lips to hers he looked long and tenderly into her blue "Heart of my heart!" he whispered. "How's all. Brand?" called the moth er as she spread a cloth on the scoured table preparatory to "feeding her menfolk" as she phrased it. Brand hung his hat on a nail and turned to the well as Bud came whistling up the path. "Fine, Mammy," he called back, "everything at Sky Line's doing well. Rod and Minnle make things move. and I can trust them. The only thing that jars is old Josefa who never fails to tell me that all half-breeds are fools, and that white men can't be trusted. And then she bakes an extra pie for Rod and smiles at Minnie proudly. Yes-all's well. All's well on Nameless, ch, old-timer?" And swinging the boy once more to his shoulder, he followed young Bud in across the sill.

NEWS REVIEW OF CURRENT EVENTS

Features of Tax Reduction Bill as Completed by the House Committee.

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

HE house ways and means commit-I tee last week completed its draft of the tax reduction measure which will be put forward by the administration in the next session of congress, and as it will have the support of the conservative Democrats its passage is virtually assured. Aggregate reductions of income and other taxes are estimated at $308,372,709. There will be no decrease in surtaxes on incomes between $10,000 and $45,000 because it was found such decrease would result in too great loss of revenue; but those incomes, get the benefit of increased exemptions and decreases in the normal rates. Accepting the advice of the treasury experts, the committee rescinded its previous action extending the $400 exemption for each child below eighteen years of age so as to include those up to twenty-one years when still in school. Administrative difficulties made this extension

In the measure adopted the surtax schedule starts at one per cent upon net incomes in excess of $10,000 and not in excess of $14,000, as provided in the present law. One per cent is added, as in the present law, for each ditional $2,000 up to $30,000. A ten per cent rate is reached, as at present, on the amount of net income in excess of $30,000 and not in excess of $34,000. Eleven per cent applies between $34,000 and $36,000, 12 per cent between $36,000 and $38,000 and 13 per cent between $38,000 and $42,000. The existing act has a rate of 14 per cent between $42,000 and $44,000, but the new schedule extends the 14 per cent rate up to $46,000. Under the new schedule there is a surtax of 15 per cent between $46,000 and $50,000, 16 per cent between $50,-000 and $60,000, 17 per cent between $60,000 and $70,000, 18 per cent between $70,000 and $80,000, 19 per cent between $80,000 and $100,000, and 20 per cent on that portion of net income in excess of $100,000. The 40 per cent maximum of the present law applies above $500,000, while the 20 per cent rate of the present law is reached at $56,000.

With every disposition to be liberal, the committee still found it wise to reject a number of proposals that would be likely to cut down too far the government's revenue. Among hese was an amendment under which small corporations and partnerships might have the option of filing returns as corporations or partnerships, thus electing whether to be taxed at a flat 121/2 per cent or to be subject to surtaxes. 'Another was the elimination of the present 12% per cent limitation on taxes and deductions for capital gains and losses. A 10 per cent tax on pistols and revolvers was retained. The estimated loss of $308,372,109 n revenue is distributed as follows: Income taxes......$193,574,546 Gift tax..... 1,000,000 Cigars and tobacco... 12,000,000 Alcohol ..... 4,000,000 Excise taxes...... 84,367,163 Occupational taxes... 11,431,000 2,000,000 Stamp taxes ..... In considering proposals for the reorganization of the board of tax appeals the committee tentatively approved a permanent board of 16 members with either long terms or life tenures, subject to removal for malfeasance in office; an increase in salary from $7,000 to $9,000, a prohibition against practice before the board at and a ban against practice within four years by members resigning. OL WILLIAM MITCHELL started out to make good on his promise o sustain his many charges against he air service, and his witnesses, one fter another, confirmed his accusaons of maladministration by the emy and navy officials. The law offir of the trial board, Col. Blanton Inship, gave him a free rein. Maj. ari Spatz, chief of the tactical unit of the training division of the air ser- | vice, gave various instances of alleged mismanagement by the War department and declared he believed the development of aviation was being retarded by the department's attitude. Asked his opinion of the knowledge of the general staff in aviation, he re-

"It is the knowledge of men who have not been trained in aviation. With the exception of Maj. M. F. Harmon and Maj. G. C. Brandt, no officers of the general staff have had the air service training that comes of having been in command of tactical units."

Capt. Robert Oldys, who has supervision of defense projects in the overseas possessions, said his recommendations in many instances had not been followed and he was not given sufficient equipment or personnel to carry out the plans that were ap-

To support Mitchell's accusation that high ranking officers had made false and misleading statements to boards of the chemical warfare service, was and then to overthrow the government called. His testimony was contradictory to the statement made by General Drum, assistant chief of staff, that it would take 3.439,000 pounds of mustard gas to render the District of Columbia unoccupiable and that 2,000 planes would be needed to carry the gas. General Fries said the job could be done with 960 planes each carrying a 1,000-pound gas bomb.

On Thursday five officers of long experience in the air service told the court of deaths, delays and damages which they attributed to the shortcomings of the department, of neglected training and recommendations ng this line up by the defense.

Mrs. Lansdowne's charges that naval officials attempted to dictate her testimony before the naval court inquiry on the destruction of the Shenandoah were repeated by her at the Mitchell trial, and are to be thoroughly investigated by the Navy department. Mrs. Lansdowne asserts that Capt. Paul Foley, judge advocate of the naval court, called at her home and questioned her, and that later she was given a letter purporting to come from Foley, containing a statement for her to use in testifying before the court.

FORCED to a showdown by the demands of the council of ambassadors on the subject of disarmament. the German government has yielded on all points, and as a result it is expected that the evacuation of the Cologne area will begin on December 1. Little or nothing of Germany's military glory will remain. Here are the main changes to be made by Berlin: General von Seeckt, commander of the reichswehr, is to be replaced by a civilian holding a political office, and the corps commanders will be responsible to him. The general staff will be liquidated. The security police will be recruited on a basis of life-long service and all military titles in it will be abolished. The big guns yet remaining in the fortress of Koenigsberg will be destroyed. The German government undertakes to prevent military training of the German youth.

These concessions by the government, it is predicted, will make impossible the ratification of the Locarno pacts before December 1. Consequently it is likely the treatles will be signed by Chancellor Luther and Foreign Minister Stresemann under special authorization of President von Hindenburg, based on an article of the constitution.

KING TUTANKHAMEN, who had lain undisturbed in his tomb at Luxor, Egypt, since 1348 B. C., was lifted from his coffin Thursday by the department or terms of the li-Howard Carter and propped up cense. against a wall. There the scientists of the expedition submitted the mummy to an X-ray examination, and any time by members who are removed | they hope to determine thus whether the pharaoh died of tuberculosis, as some Egyptologists think, or was murdered, as Mr. Carter suspects. Tut's internal organs, which were found in jars, will be analyzed for possible traces of poison. Mr. Carter has a rioda theory that the king was slain by General Horemkeb, who usurped the throne. The mummy was incased in three golden inner coffins which are said to be wonderfully decorated. Carer's operations are surrounded with xtraordinary secrecy.

N EWS from China was exciting tast week-if you can get excited over news from China. For several weeks the forces in opposition to Marsha Chang Tso-lin, the Manchurlan, had been gathering strength, and finally they drove him and his troops northward and threatened to cut off his retreat. Gen. Feng Yu-hslang assumed full control at Peking, where the government officials were virtual prisoners, and on Thursday word came vis Hawaii indicating that martial law had been proclaimed and that President Tuan Chi-jui had resigned. Members of the cabinet and other officials who supported Chang already had thrown up their jobs and fled. Gen. Sun Chuan-Fang, governor of Chekiang, it is said, is planning to attack Manchurla with troops that are being embarked at Shanghai and Haichow.

M USSOLINI emerges stronger than ever from the rumpus caused by the recent plot to assassinate him. The plan, according to official investiof investigation, General Fries, head gators, was first to kill the premier by an armed revolt. The chief conspirators, presumably, are under ar rest and will be punished, but the dictator wisely restrained his Fascist hosts from exacting promiscuous vengeance. Socialist organizations are being suppressed.

Another ruler, King Ferdinand of Rumania, escaped assassination which was plotted by Communists.

The conference favored limiting the number of stations and restricting broadcasting on a basis of service to listeners. It voted that direct advertising should be eliminated. Most important of the actions of the conference was the adoption of a legislative program which will be presented to congress. The principles of this program are:

> The administration of radio shall be vested in the secretary of commerce.

Free speech shall be upheld. While broadcasting stations shall not be regarded as public utilities, permits to go on the air shall be issued only to those who will render a benefit to the public.

The President shall have power to commandeer stations in period of war. No monopoly in radio communication shall be permitted.

Appeal from decisions of the secretary of commerce may be made to ap-

For Constipation

Gives Tanlac full credit.

Over twelve years of stomach misery had made a physical wreck of "Jacob Ferdinand. He spent hundreds of dollars seeking relief but every attempt failed until he tried Tanlac.

This great tonic brought him immediate relief. "After seven bottles," he says, "I am a well and happy man. I will gladly talk to anyone personally and will answer all letters regarding my experience with Tanlac. For it proved a god-send to me."

*Authentic statement. Address on request.

Tanlac is Nature's great Tonic and builder. Compounded after the famous Tanlac formula, from roots, barks and curative herbs alone, it is absolutely harmless. Millions owe their health and happiness to this great remedy.

Don't let stomach trouble make your life miserable a day longer. Get a bottle of Tanlac at your druggist's at once. The first dose will make you feel better. You'll be a new person with the sparkling eyes and rosy cheeks that come from perfect health.

Black satin makes the Napoleon shape at the right with soft crown and brim that droops across the back. Folds of the satin and a fine jeweled pin with pendants adorn it. The hat at the center is fashioned of velvet and is very unusual in style. The cluster of small, bright quills posed near the front remind one of American Indian headdress-which probably inspired it. Most interesting is the small hat of velvet, which finishes the group, with a halo of stitched velvet posed against it. There is nothing simple about the hats that grace the climax of winter styles.

WIDER BRIDGES IS PLAN IN MICHIGAN

Nineteen years ago Wayne county, Mich., developed a plan for improving the system of county highways. This original plan is now complete, and additional paved highways have been constructed. But although the system was apparently completed by the beginning of 1924, that year marked the beginning of the largest highway imrovement program ever undertaken y the county, and future years will bring developments that were undreamed of when the original plan was launched. The reason for this continued activity was that with the continued increase in traffic there came a need for wider paved surfaces, and that need brought with it the adoption of new designs in bridges and the necessity of widening bridges on existing highways. And profiting by previous experience on their own and other improved roads. Wayne county is building new bridges not only for the present but for the future.

They did not stop at widening their bridges to take care of present traffic needs, but they went further and designed the bridges so that they could be widened at some future time. For this reason bridges of the deck girder type are preferred. Of these types the concrete T-beam bridge with a concrete slab deck is the most often used. This type is easiest to expand to care for an increased volume of traffic. It is only necessary to lengthen the abutments, add extra T-beams to support the deck, and place the additional width on the floor slabs. The use of cast stone concrete hand rails also facilitates the work of widening the bridge when the need arises. Such railings, while they are massive enough to suggest strength and security, can readily be taken up and moved outward to the new edge of the roadway.

New standards adopted by the county place the minimum width of roadway for all bridges at 28 feet and it is a general rule that provisions be made for sidewalks on all new structures. On the main highways bridges are designed with a 40-foot clear span between curbs in addition to the space required for walks. All bridges built with a roadway of less than 40 feet are so designed that they will permit of expansion for increased traffic.

All bridges are designed for trucks with a gross weight of 24 tons. Explain the styles are. It is straight in illustrates new oddities in shapes and perience has shown that after the concrete mixing plant is on the job, the additional cost of building the heavier bridge is very slight.

Concrete is the material used in the construction of Wayne county's bridges of the work of providing adequate transportation. It must continue if the traveling public is to have full use of the roads. It is one of the activi-

Automobile Development

Changes Road Building The rapid development of auton bile traffic is making radical changes in road building and creating an extraordinary demand for new highways, says Dr. Arthur Selwyn Broad in the New York Herald-Tribune. No other factor since the early days of military engineering, when roads were required for military purposes primarily, has led to so much road building. Throughout the world there has been, or is being, constructed an enormous mileage of automobile roads and in the United States and Canada, where 25 years ago few good state and provincial highways existed, there have been built highways that will bear comparison with the finest in the world.

Work on 171 Roads

During a recent week 171 contracts for construction and reconstruction of state highways were under way and 83 pavements were being laid, according to a statement issued by Commissioner A. W. Brandt of the bureau of highways in the Wisconsin department of public works. The report adds that 8,182 men are employed by contractors on this work.

To Equal 1924 Mark

Road building this year "should be at least as great as in 1924," the bureau of public roads said in announce ing that 23,000 miles of highways were built to grade or surfaced on the state

Over 17,000 miles of roads were surfaced, the bureau estimating the total surfaced road mileage in state systems on January 1, 1924, at 111,400.

Business Boom in Mexico

The sale of automobiles, tires, gaso line and oil in Mexico is expected to show a great increase with the completion of a program of road building now under way, which calls for an expenditure of $1,000,000 in Mexican currency each month. It is planned to build a network of paved roads that will cover the country. Construction will begin simultaneously from various points. Revenues from gasoline and tobacco taxes are being set aside for this purpose.
