

Brzezinski thinks like a pitcher-fast, to the point

EDITOR'S NOTE — Some people say he does things "in a Zbig way." To some that means shooting from the hip. To others, it's being methodical, deliberate. To him, it means he thinks like the man he advises on national security. And that's one reason Zbigniew Brzezinski is so close to Jimmy Carter.

By RICHARD E. MEYER

WASHINGTON (AP) —

Morning in, morning out, sure as sunup and about that time, Zbigniew Brzezinski treads down a quiet White House hallway to the office of the president of the United States. Sometimes, he suspects, Jimmy Carter braces himself.

Brzezinski steps inside, sits down and, working from intelligence reports, tells Carter what has happened throughout the world overnight. Sometimes it's good news. Other times it's bad. But Brzezinski is always there.

Before the day is out, he's likely to be back — with more intelligence, analysis and advice. Nearly a dozen times, perhaps. Few have this kind of access to Jimmy Carter.

What is it, asks a visitor one evening, that makes him, Zbigniew Brzezinski, son of a Polish diplomat, so influential with Jimmy Carter, son of a Georgia dirt farmer?

"All I can say," Brzezinski replies, going into a windup, "is that I relate to him easily. I like him as a person. I like the way he thinks."

What is it about the way the president thinks?
"It's like Tom Seaver pitches — it's fast. It's to the point. It's crisp. It's analytical."

That, say associates, is how Brzezinski thinks. Some say to a fault.

Zbigniew Kazimierz Brzezinski, born 50 years ago in Warsaw, might not be a household word, but he's one of the most powerful men in government.

He heads the staff of the National Security Council, which includes the president, vice president, the secretaries of state and defense and, in practice, whoever else the president gathers to help him make foreign policy. Brzezinski also is the president's national security adviser. That makes him one of Jimmy Carter's top counselors during times of international crisis.

Among other things, Brzezinski believes in making the United States "responsibly tough" toward the Soviet Union, which has earned him the title of "enemy of detente" from the Russians.

His willingness to sound alarm about Soviet activities in Africa and elsewhere puts him at odds sometimes with Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance, who tries hard to avoid polarization and cold war tones that might damage strategic arms limitation talks with the Soviets. The two men meet with Carter and his staff on Fridays.

"I've seen them at the Friday morning breakfasts argue like cats and dogs," says top Carter aide Hamilton Jordan. "It's very seldom about objectives, but sometimes about our tactics. It's done at a professional level, and it's never personal."

Nonetheless, one result is that American foreign policy sometimes ends up looking confused — as it did following Carter's recent speech at the U.S. Naval Academy on U.S.-Soviet relations. The president wrote it himself, balancing carrot against stick, to avoid anointing one adviser over another.

The next day he got a letter from senior members of the House International Relations Committee asking him to clear up "confusion and doubt."

But if foreign policy ends up appearing confused, it starts with Carter and Brzezinski very much on the same track.

"There's a similarity in the way their minds work," says a member of Brzezinski's staff who has known him a long time. "They think in logical ways. Logical, coldly analytical minds." Brzezinski is very sure of himself, says one Carter aide. "No hesitation." Another says: "His kind of world view doesn't leave much room for doubts."

Stanley Hoffmann, professor of government at Harvard and one of the few Brzezinski critics willing to be named, says his former colleague has "a certain tendency to shoot from the hip."

So far, there's been no test in a crisis. So critics, many of them professors, cite what they see as ordinary instances of being wrong in a Zbig way.

Hoffmann points to Vietnam. Brzezinski, who supported the U.S. role there, said in early 1968 the United States was "willing to continue for 30 years." The next year, Brzezinski himself called for a cease-fire.

Other critics seize on past Brzezinski writings and utterances to find that he wrongly predicted that the Czechs would never revolt, and that the 1973 Arab oil embargo would cause a strong wave of anti-Semitism in the United States.

But most, including some in the administration, cite his remark on "Face the Nation" early this year that border clashes between Vietnam and Cambodia are "the first case of a proxy war between China and the Soviet Union."

The Vietnamese and Cambodians have been hostile on their own for centuries, and a White House staffer calls Brzezinski's formulation "a source of embarrassment." Brzezinski concedes that "proxy war" was an overstatement — "I should have said 'proxy conflict.'" He sees an element of political conflict between Russia and Peking in the Indochina turbulence.

"On a couple of occasions, where State Department people also felt the president had made a terrible decision but couldn't get Vance to go back and appeal it, Zbig went in alone," a staff member says.

The diversity of Brzezinski's staff is remarkable. Members range from avowed conservative Samuel Huntington, an old Brzezinski friend who argued in the 1960s that the nation suffered from "an excess of democracy," to people who have worked for Eugene McCarthy, George McGovern and Morris Udall.

A foreign policy aide in Congress is convinced that some staff members were forced upon Brzezinski, but when the question is raised he bristles. "I picked them all," he says.

Indeed, some wags have suggested that Brzezinski picked Jimmy Carter, with whom he became associated very early. Brzezinski's career suggests aspirations to a larger role than a scholar's. He began his academic life at Harvard where, Stanley Hoffman recalls, "he told me very early on ... that the last thing he wanted was to become a Mr. Chips."

He moved to Columbia, founded its Research Institute on Communist Affairs, gained attention as a speaker, established contacts with the press and in 1966 became a policy planner in the State Department during the Johnson administration. Two years later he directed Hubert Humphrey's foreign policy task force during Humphrey's presidential campaign.

In the early 1970s, Brzezinski, David Rockefeller, chairman of Chase Manhattan, and others formed the Trilateral Commission which studied and promoted the interests of the industrialized West — Japan, Western Europe and the United States.

The Trilateral Commission became Brzezinski's way of introducing Jimmy Carter to foreign policy — and to the foreign policy establishment. The governor of Georgia was invited to join Walter Mondale, now vice president; Cyrus Vance, now secretary of state; W. Michael Blumenthal, now secretary of treasury; Harold Brown, now secretary of defense; Andrew Young, now ambassador to the United Nations, and nearly a dozen others who eventually became part of the Carter administration.

At a Trilateral Commission meeting in 1975 at Kyoto, Japan, Carter gave a Brzezinski-reviewed foreign policy address — and said he was going to run for the White House.

"He had made some comments about the Middle East," Brzezinski recalls, "and I said, 'I'm glad to see a presidential candidate who is willing to speak about the Middle East with guts.'"

"A lot of people were snickering," Brzezinski recalls. "Within a few months he told his students at Columbia that Jimmy Carter would be the next president."

Brzezinski says proudly that he decided to support Carter when he had a recognition factor of 1 to 2 percent.

An associate of Brzezinski's notes that he is "an enormously generous man" to people "weaker than he is ... and (who) honestly need him." That's the Brzezinski who took in an associate and his wife when they couldn't find an apartment; the Brzezinski whose wife cared for a staff assistant's mother injured in an accident.

As to his equals, the associate says, Brzezinski "respects them and gives them a first-rate argument if he can't win them to his way of thinking." Then there are "people who think they are as good as he is but aren't. Oh, he just loves those."

Less friendly observers see him as arrogant, condescending or abrupt, and critics among foreign policy aides in Congress accuse him of political insensitivity. "He has neither people sense nor political sense, and maybe both are part of the same thing," says a veteran assistant to a senator whose support the president needs, especially in foreign affairs.

There are complaints, too, from congressional quarters, that Brzezinski rarely if ever consults with Congress, and some note that he has failed to place his own allies in executive agencies dealing with foreign policy, as Henry Kissinger had done by this time in the Nixon administration. "That made it a lot easier for Kissinger to exert decisive influence on foreign policy issues," a Senate aide says. "Brzezinski has no comparable network."

In his conversation with a reporter, Brzezinski counters that "I have made it a point to work closely with the top people of these agencies, which is a different way of doing it and, I think in some ways, more effective."

As to relations with Congress, he notes he's recently hired a fulltime Congressional liaison staffer, but "I felt I shouldn't be out front in dealing with Congress. The secretary of state should be. If I moved out in front ... all the suspicions about the National Security Council assistant undercutting the secretary of state would surface ... I intend to be more active, especially if the congressional people want more contact. I really didn't realize that they desired it."

Critics cite as a prime example of "political insensitivity" the statement issued jointly by the United States and the Soviet Union last October, urging Israel to recognize "the legitimate rights of the Palestinian people."

The statement, and that phrase particularly — it was the first time the U.S. had spoken, as the Arab countries long have, of the Palestinians' "legitimate rights" — caused a furor among U.S. Jews.

The president's domestic political advisors were caught by surprise. Brzezinski hadn't advised them beforehand. The first that Hamilton Jordan, the president's top domestic advisor, knew of it was when he heard it on television on a trip to Virginia.

Consultation last year, says Brzezinski, was "very, very ad hoc ..."

"In this particular case — it's not an excuse, it's just an explanation — Cy (Vance) was in New York. I was in Europe. Then I came back. The statement was waiting. It had been approved right away. It went to the president and was issued. So we didn't have the formal process."

Now they do. Jordan sits in on foreign-policy decisions — by order of the president.

The first U.S. hydrogen bomb dropped from a plane exploded over Bikini Atoll in 1956.

A look at the Soviet criminal justice system

By BARTON REPERT
Associated Press Writer
MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet criminal justice system, center of world attention during last week's trials of two leading dissidents, is an unusual blend of continental European law and socialist doctrine praised by Soviet officials as the fairest in the world.

But many dissidents emphatically disagree. They contend that authorities often bend the country's legal institutions to suit their own purposes, resulting in verdicts that are decided even before a trial begins.

In a dramatic closing statement just before his sentence was announced Friday, Jewish activist Anatoly Shcharansky declared: "To my wife and my people I can only say, 'Next year in Jerusalem!'" To this court which decided my fate in advance, I say nothing.

The court then proceeded to convict 30-year-old Shcharansky of spying for the United States and other anti-Soviet activities and sentenced him to 13 years at hard labor.

The espionage conviction came despite an unusual personal assertion by President Carter that Shcharansky never had any links to U.S. intelligence operations.

The other prominent dissident on trial, Alexander Ginzburg, was given an eight-year term in a labor camp Thursday on a conviction for anti-Soviet activities. His wife called the trial "a tragic farce."

Many Western observers tend to agree with the dissidents' view that, at least in political cases, court verdicts and sentences may be decided in advance by upper-level officials and other government officials before the cases go to trial.

If true, this would seem to contrast considerably with the Soviet judicial system's handling of ordinary criminal cases, in which a defendant apparently is more likely to have a fair trial.

Western legal experts point out that there is nothing intrinsically unfair about the Soviet system, which combines elements of French and other continental European legal practice with innovations stemming from this nation's socialist ideology.

The Soviets have borrowed from the French, for example, the custom of the judge's leading role in questioning defendants during a trial.

But on top of this framework of European judicial tradition, Soviet courts have added such distinctive new elements as an emphasis on examining a defendant's work record and past contributions to society.

Says Sergei Bannikov, vice president of the Soviet Supreme Court: "The Soviet judicial system is built in such a way as to make it accessible to the population and to deal quickly and fairly with all cases."

A Soviet citizen involved in a court case may make use of services provided at nominal-to-moderate cost by his neighborhood's "legal consultation" office. He either may hire his own defense lawyer or use a court-appointed lawyer.

Soviet court cases are not decided by a jury. Instead, they are both heard and decided by a professional "people's judge" — elected by the public on a one-candidate ballot — along with two "people's assessors."

These assessors, who generally do not have any formal legal training, are chosen from the local population in accordance with the socialist principle that the common people should control the administration of justice.

Bannikov, in a 1976 article published by the Soviet magazine Ogonyok, said at that time there were a total of 650,000 people's assessors sitting in district and city courts, which serve as the first level of the Soviet judicial structure.

The Supreme Court official noted that almost 99 percent of all cases were handled by such district and city courts. He said the number of cases being appealed to higher courts was "noticeably and consistently decreasing."

Soviet law provides that decisions by district and city courts may be appealed by either the defendant or the prosecutor through the provincial courts, the supreme courts of the U.S.S.R.'s various republics, the Supreme Court of the U.S.S.R. and ultimately as high as the presidium of the Supreme Soviet — the Soviet Union's parliament.

It also stipulates that on an appeal by the defendant, a higher court may not increase the punishment already imposed or apply to the same case a law governing a more serious crime.

Under Soviet law, all trials are supposed to be open to the general public, unless extraordinary considerations, such as national security, require them to be closed.

The Shcharansky and Ginzburg trials, however, were effectively closed to the public, following a pattern set in virtually all dissident cases in recent years.

Dissident supporters, Western correspondents and diplomatic observers who asked to enter the courtrooms were told either there were no seats available or that they needed a special "invitation" to attend the proceedings. Shcharansky's mother, for example, was barred from entering.

But in an unprecedented move, Soviet authorities arranged for twice-daily press briefings on the progress of the Shcharansky trial. The briefings did not amount to actual news conferences, however, because no questions were accepted from correspondents after a court official read an official statement.

During Ginzburg's trial in Kaluga, about 100 miles south of Moscow, a Foreign Ministry official was on hand to aid Western correspondents in talking directly with court officials, who painstakingly answered the reporters' questions.

Town thinks it won, but feds are not so certain

BAYVIEW, Texas (AP) — The mayor of this quiet little town of 400 is confident he and his friends have successfully repelled federal attempts to bring a job corps center to the area.

But a Department of Labor official in Dallas says the feds have not given up.

"It hasn't been forgotten about," said William Harris, regional administrator for DOL in Dallas.

The dispute began last summer when Col. Philip Loveless, mayor here, heard about plans to place a Job Corps Center at a nearby facility that now houses an immigration and naturalization serve detention camp.

Everyone at the reunion had name Jim Smith

By JOE MAGRUDER
Associated Press Writer
NEW CASTLE, N.H. (AP) — "I can't hear a word," a woman giggled as yet another Jim Smith stepped up to the dead microphone. "But I know who they're introducing."

It was at the kickoff to the ninth annual meeting of the International Jim Smith Society — a get-together in which nicknames and middle initials take on unusually important meaning. The society's membership list is redundant — everyone is a Jim Smith.

Sporting "Jim Smith Power" T-shirts and "Hi! I'm Jim Smith" nametags, folks including truck drivers, Army colonels and car salesmen from around the country gathered this weekend — as their membership cards proclaim — to "promote the interests of Jim Smiths everywhere."

The society is the brainchild of James H. Smith Jr. of Camp Hill, Pa. "Camp Hill Jim," as he's known to other Jim Smiths considered starting the society decades before he actually did in 1969.

"I wasn't sure there would be the interest," he recalls, adding that he was impressed when membership soared to 20 after a few months.

Friday, the society's 653rd and 654th members joined when Jim Smith of Big Chimney, W. Va., enlisted by telephone, and Jim Smith of Brookline, Mass., dropped in by boat at the Wentworth-By-the-Sea hotel scene of this year's three-day festival.

Appropriately, the hotel is owned and run by long-time society member James Barker Smith.

If you want to join — for life, no less — all you need is $5 and the right name. But deciding whether a candidate's name fits the latter criterion sometimes isn't easy.

Camp Hill Jim says it's still an open question whether Jim Smythes qualify. "Nobody in nine years has ever raised the question," he says. "I don't know what I'd do, to tell you the truth," if someone did.

The highlight of each year's festival is an all-Jim-Smith softball game, played this year between the No Sox and the Red Sox. "You don't need a program to know who's on first," says Camp Hill Jim.

Although some members say their common name leads to ribbing and frequent mix-ups, some say there are advantages.

Jim Smith of Oil City, Pa., says he recalls when he let other Pvt. Jim Smiths step forward when the name was called during his Army days.

But others say they'd be just as happy without the occasional advantage of anonymity.

When it came time for James E. Smith of Columbia, S.C., to name his first-born son, he said he didn't even consider Jim Smith Jr.

"I wouldn't inflict that on anybody," he said.

Sisters found cheap flight

ALPINE, Calif. (AP) — Three sisters from Holland will tell you it pays to read a newspaper story closely. They did and found themselves vacationing here after hopping a jetliner for 50 cents each.

"I was reading a news story on the front page of an Amsterdam newspaper about an air fare war between two airlines," 21-year-old Michelle Helendorn said Friday. "The one airline was offering to fly charter passengers to the United States for about $60 per person.

"The last line of the story said another airline was making the same offer for 50 cents per person, but it was just for the few seats that would be left on the flight."

So Michelle and sisters Ricki-Ann, 18, and Marieke, 13, who live in Leersum about 60 miles south of the Dutch capital, said they were the first ones in the line. An airline employee told them only a handful of people had inquired about the newspaper story.

The sisters' wish to visit Alpine, which is near San Diego, was sparked by a story Michelle read about efforts to save wild horses in the United States. It mentioned Roy Kuphal, and after the sisters contacted him, Kuphal invited them to visit him.

But Loveless quickly added that most of the black youths at the centers are merely products of their tough environments. Nevertheless, he said they might cause problems for the quiet community.

"They ate up everyone around them," he said of stories he heard from other centers.

The controversy heated up in January but it never reached the boiling point. DOL officials came here to meet with area residents and Loveless and others went to see Gov. Dolph Briscoe.

Briscoe told Loveless DOL had tabled the plan.

"It's the typical way for politicians to get the heat off," Loveless said.

Since then, the dispute has disappeared from the headlines and many area officials are convinced they have managed to fend off the feds.

Not so, says Harris.

"We still have hopes of getting a center in that area. We think there's a need for it in South Texas," he said.

The vociferous opposition? "There is local opposition," Harris understated.

"It's difficult to open a center like that without some opposition. Based on our assessment, the majority of the people are not opposed to it," he said.

Astro-Graph
By Bernice Bede Osol

Your Birthday

July 18, 1978

This coming year should be a series of socially stimulating experiences for you. Take care, however, not to neglect old standbys in order to woo new pals.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Be careful today not to force people you're fond of on your mate if he or she doesn't take to these people as enthusiastically as you do. Find out more about yourself by sending for your copy of Astro-Graph Letter. Mail 50 cents for each and a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to Astro-Graph, P.O. Box 489, Radio City Station, N.Y. 10019. Be sure to specify birth sign.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) It isn't like you to try to skim the cream from a collective effort. Today, however, you may look to fatten your coffer while denying helpers.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Today's fun happening could turn somewhat sour if those you're sharing the good times with fail to pick up their share of the tab. Avoid tight-fisted types.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Don't spoil what should be a pleasant day by insisting that those with you must march to the tune you foot. Let their melodies and yours blend.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22)

Your ingenuity and efficiency today will not be fully appreciated by all. Someone who is jealous of you will try to demean your achievements.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Financial conditions are likely to be a mixed bag today. You're equally as adept at spending as you are at making a profit.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Socially you'll be a big hit today, but persons important to your career are not apt to view you in the same light. Strive to impress them, too.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) If you adhere to your automatic responses you're capable of surprising accomplishments today. Too much soul-searching evokes a negative attitude.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Friends appreciate you for what you are, but you may have difficulty in believing this today and try to buy their good graces with material favors.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) For best results financially and careerwise today, keep no-naligned parties out of the act. Kibitzers could muddy the water.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) In social situations today make sure your conversation is light and breezy. Serious subjects important to you may only bore others.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Conditions appear profitable today, provided you don't divide your efforts between work and play. Concentrate on the former. Eliminate the latter.
