Housing Shortage

Camping trailers fill the normally empty Hobart Street Park as the 44th Tri-State Senior Golf Association Tournament gets underway at the Pampa Country Club today. Due to a shortage of motel space, contestants in the tournament are "camping out" throughout the city. Tournament Starter Floyd Sackett said 160-170 golfers are expected to compete in the week-long event. (Pampa News photo by Ron Ennis)

Severe thunderstorm rampages through Allegheny River Valley

EAST BRADY, Pa. (AP) — A violent thunderstorm swept through the Allegheny River valley following a four-day heat wave and left a path of destruction. One man was killed while trying to dock his boat. About 60 persons were injured, mostly from fallen debris, when a funnel cloud dipped suddenly into the valley late Sunday afternoon. The National Weather Service said the storm probably was a tornado, but they could not confirm it. "I figured a normal storm was coming and all of a sudden it was like being in the bottom of a swimming pool," said George Wolf, owner of the KOA Campground at nearby Knox. "The wind was so strong it bent two-inch steel pipes to the ground," he said, pointing to downed flagpoles at the battered campground.

About 30 camping trailers, some turned upside down, were demolished or heavily damaged at the campground, located in Clarion County. Some 1,000 persons were camping at the site when the storm hit, pelting the grounds with golf-ball sized hail.

Russians haven't balked on strategy

WASHINGTON (AP) — The chief U.S. arms control negotiator says the Soviets have not objected to a U.S. strategy that would keep the Russians guessing the location of land-based missiles. Paul Warnke said Sunday it has been understood for a year that both countries could deploy mobile missiles under a new arms limitation agreement that would last until 1985.

Mobile missile deployment is prohibited in a three-year protocol now being negotiated, but not in a longer-term treaty that would limit overall numbers of missiles and bombers. The latest round of strategic arms talks was held in Geneva earlier this month when Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance met for two days with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko.

It was widely reported that one of the points discussed was the United States "shell game" strategy for mobile missiles. Hundreds of missiles would be moved between thousands of empty launching silos in random fashion, complicating a Soviet effort to destroy U.S. land-based missiles in a first-strike attack.

According to unnamed Carter administration officials quoted by the Times, Semenov did not rule out U.S. mobile missile deployment. "We do anticipate some problems in garbage collecting," City Manager Tom Huebner said Sunday. "We will maintain that service. I would anticipate it will take two to four weeks to get back to normal."

Unincorporated areas slated for final vote

Final action will be taken on the proposed annexation by the city of unincorporated properties in north and northwest Pampa at the regular city commission meeting Tuesday at 9:30 a.m. in the commission chambers at City Hall.

The commission will hear the second and final reading of the ordinance annexing the land, and then will either approve or deny the annexation. The commission will also consider on first reading an ordinance changing from "Agricultural" to "Commercial" a part of the Conquistador Addition located west of Sumner Street fronting on Kentucky Street. No opposition was voiced to the zoning change at a public hearing during the commission's July 11 meeting.

Welfare board meets Tuesday

The Gray County Welfare Board will meet Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. in the county court room. The meetings agenda centers around a public relations program on foster home promotion. This will be presented by the department of human resources. At their last meeting, the board discussed a foster home public relations program, but decided not to take any action on it for the present.

In other action the board will authorize payment of miscellaneous bills for the months of June and July. The board will also meet in an executive session to go over case reports and authorize payment for the July board billing.

One-third of garbage crew working in San Antonio

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — About 35 more San Antonio garbage workers refused to work this morning because they said they feared for their safety, leaving the job of garbage collection to about one third of the normal work force.

Assistant City Manager Louis Fox said, "They're (the 35) fired, too. When they walk into the picket line, they're finished." Saturday, 106 workers were fired after they struck for higher wages. State law prohibits public employees from striking.

Those who reported for work this morning did so amid taunts from pickets representing the fired workers. There were no incidents, but police were on hand and city officials said they would provide protection for non-striking workers if necessary.

Meanwhile, the first 52 replacements for the ex-garbage-men, who struck because of a wage dispute, were taking physical examinations and being readied to start work Tuesday. Some 150 of the city's 300 garbage workers began collections today, driving past about 30 pickets.

"We're gonna have some problems," said assistant city manager Louis Fox. "There's some concern, but we'll protect the people." "I'm asking for no violence, but I don't know what the outcome will be," said strike leader Eddie Leija, one of those fired Saturday.

Philadelphia and New Orleans have also been hit by garbage worker strikes within the past week. Strikers had hoped to spread the strike to landfill workers, airport maintenance employees, animal control officers and street department workers, but indications this morning were that no such support was likely.

Asked Sunday if other city employees who strike in support of the garbagemen would be fired, Huebner replied, "I intend to be consistent in my actions." Trash collections were planned only for the south side of this city of 800,000, where temperatures have hovered near 100 degrees. Northside residents were instructed to take their garbage to the landfill or to three public parks, where trucks were stationed. Union members, who staged a three-day walkout last May over wages and working conditions, are unhappy with the city council's decision last week to give all city employees a 6 percent raise. The union had asked for a 9.3 percent wage hike.

Israel ready for sovereignty talks

JERUSALEM (AP) — Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan told Parliament today Israel is prepared to discuss the question of the ultimate sovereignty for the West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip. Israel also is willing to discuss a territorial compromise "if a concrete proposal is submitted," Dayan told the Knesset as he opened a debate on the Mideast situation.

The cabinet on Sunday rejected President Anwar Sadat's proposal that Israel return two areas of the Sinai Desert to Egypt as a good-will gesture, but said it was willing to negotiate a trade for the northern coastal town of El Arish and Mount Sinai. "Nobody can get something for nothing, and this will be the policy of Israel," Prime Minister Menachem Begin told reporters after the cabinet meeting. "No unilateral step is feasible by any country."

Dayan gave a 45-minute report on his meeting last week in Leeds Castle, England with Egyptian Foreign Minister Mohammed Ibrahim Kamel and U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance. The Knesset corridors, meanwhile, were abuzz with the news that Commerce Minister Yigal Hurvitz, a hawk on the question of Mideast peace, had tendered his resignation over a budget proposal he regards as inflationary. Begin was trying to change Hurvitz' mind and smooth over the tiff between Hurvitz and Finance Minister Simcha Ehrlich.

Dayan said the question of future sovereignty in the West Bank and Gaza is the central gap between the Arab attitude and ours. Israel's peace plan offers the Palestinian Arabs in the two occupied territories administrative autonomy, or limited self-rule, with continued presence of the Israeli army in these areas captured in the 1967 Mideast war. "If Israel's proposal of administrative autonomy is accepted," Dayan said, "Israel is prepared to discuss after five years the question of the sovereignty over Judea and Samaria and the Gaza Strip." Judea and Samaria are the biblical names for the West Bank.

Uneasy dawn lull in Lebanese city

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The latest outbreak of Syrian-Christian warfare in Beirut subsided into an uneasy lull at dawn today after nearly 36 hours of firing. Christian spokesmen reported nine Christians killed and 62 wounded in 48 hours.

The Christian commands said their forces came under unprovoked fire from the Syrians. One Christian spokesman said the Syrians were "fomenting the clashes on threadbare pretexts." Al Amal, the Phalange Party newspaper, said the Syrians "invented the sniper story, then shelled residential quarters indiscriminately."

The Syrians also accused the National Liberals and the Phalangists, the two biggest Christian parties, of "deliberately provoking Syrian forces as part of rightist plans to partition Lebanon" into Christian and Moslem states.

President Elias Sarkis contacted the commander of the Syrian forces and demanded an immediate cease-fire. The Phalangist radio station reported Christian civilians moved mattresses and other household items into basements and other shelters Sunday night, and some residents were reported taking refuge in northern Lebanon.

"We are bracing for a hot night," said one man in Ein Rummaneh. "This time we will be much better off than last time. We have replenished our stocks of food and fresh water." The Syrian army, which intervened in the Lebanese civil war to save the Christians from defeat, now is trying to bring them under its control and end their cooperation with the Israelis in southern Lebanon.

Administration facing two major showdowns

By RICHARD PYLE Associated Press Writer WASHINGTON (AP) — The Carter administration, having enjoyed only middling success with its legislative program this year, faces two important showdowns on Capitol Hill this week.

The Senate is expected to vote by Tuesday on whether to lift the three-year-old arms sales embargo against Turkey — an issue President Carter calls the "most important" foreign policy question still before Congress this session.

In the House, meanwhile, a move will be made to join with the Senate in voting to prohibit Carter from imposing an import fee on foreign oil. Carter has threatened to impose a fee of up to $6 a barrel if Congress fails to approve his crude oil tax proposal. Considerable White House prestige was riding on each of the issues, regarded by congressional leaders as too close to predict the outcome. Final House action is due Tuesday on compromise legislation authorizing a federal loan guarantee of $1.65 billion to New York City. The Senate could also act on the matter during the week.

In addition, the House was to take up a five-year extension of the U.S. Civil Rights Commission, with dispute likely over an amendment to bar it from dealing with abortion as a civil right. The Ways and Means Committee is also resuming work Tuesday on a $15 billion tax cut proposal, with capital gains tax ceilings the central issue. Debate over the Turkish arms embargo is expected to dominate the Senate's consideration of a $2.8 billion security assistance authorization bill for fiscal 1979. Carter administration officials have pressed hard for a repeal of the embargo imposed by Congress on Turkey in retaliation for that country's 1974 invasion of Cyprus.

No real tax cut

A tax cut is a tax cut is a tax increase. This may not be poetry to the ears of American taxpayers, but so saith the Treasury.

Sure enough, the highly touted Carter "tax cut" is a tax increase, according to the government's own calculations. The Treasury Department figures that the combined burden of federal income taxes and Social Security taxes amounted to 12.6 percent of personal income in 1977. If the president's program goes through unimpeded by Congress — an increasingly unlikely possibility — these two federal taxes will amount to 12.9 percent of income in 1978. Inflation, the friend and companion of big government, pushes the taxpayer into ever higher tax brackets, and the tax cuts that follow never quite compensate for these tax increases.

In government, bad economic management produces its own rewards. The more inflation the government causes, the more revenues it takes in. Economists have calculated that every percentage point increase in inflation, government revenues increase by 1.65 percentage points. And this means members of Congress can appropriate more money to get themselves re-elected.

Some countries have eliminated such windfall "inflation" profits on the part of government by indexing tax rates to inflation. As the inflation rate increases, the tax brackets are adjusted at the same pace.

Will Congress follow suit? When such a bill was proposed several years ago, lawmakers voted overwhelmingly to scotch it. Not much has been heard from it since.

'Now' people should turn to faith

By SAM CAMPBELL

One of the peculiarities of the modern marketplace is the "now" syndrome. The characteristic is demonstrated in a variety of forms — from instant coffee to tract houses.

Today, you buy a frozen fish at the supermarket, pop it in the microwave, and — after supper — settle down in front of the instant-communication tube for the predigested newscast.

That isn't all bad, either. Sure, working wives prefer to do something creative once in a while like dropping an egg in cake mix, but when they've spent eight long hours pushing the family income into the 40 percent bracket, you can't blame them for wishing to capture some small identity for themselves apart from the job routine and household chores.

Carried to the extreme, the "now" syndrome becomes mere physical sensation. So we have the phenomena of instant bliss through dope, instant ecstasy through rock music, and immediate insanity by means of strobe lights. Today, we even have the atomic bomb — instant obliteration.

Human beings, it seems are tired of waiting. They believe that what they don't get now, they can never get. All time is compressed into the current fleeting moment. The future does not exist. The past is forgotten. Promises are just verbalizations to make the other party feel good while you bend him to your whim. Investors, typically renowned for patience, look for the quick return. Such is the pulse of the consuming public and hence of the business scene.

The question is, how does a businessman deal with the existential fallout? On the one hand, he must cater to the prevailing mood. On the other hand, he must second-guess what the morrow will bring. To that point, let me offer a few contemplations.

How much government fraud?

(Human Events)

Fraud in the federal government's myriad aid programs has grown to more than $12 billion a year. That is the estimate of prosecutors, government officials and congressional investigators interviewed by the New York Times. The actual figure may be considerably higher, perhaps as much as $25 billion, according to John Ohls of the watchdog General Accounting Office.

The fraud takes many forms, from nickel-dime chiseling on food stamps to multi-million-dollar rip-offs by firms shipping grain abroad for Uncle Sam. Those defrauding the government range from the doctor who bills HEW for seven tonsillectomies on the same Medicaid patient; to the daughter of a Civil War widow who collected "widow's benefits" for two decades after her mother died; to the operators of a store-front "barber school" which bilked the Veterans Administration for nearly $5 million in GI educational benefits.

With fraud widespread, what is being done about it? Very little. The Times discovered that the Department of Transportation has assigned a grand total of four inspectors to detect fraud and abuse in the $6-billion-a-year federal highway program. At the Veterans Administration, there is one auditor for every $238 million dished out. The Labor Department allocates three one-hundredths of 1 percent of its $23.5-billion budget to combatting fraud. And those few agencies that have asked for investigators and auditors to save taxpayer dollars have had their requests chopped back by the Office of Management and Budget.

Throughout government there is little enthusiasm for eliminating fraud. Allan L. Reynolds, the new inspector general of the Veterans Administration, and a federal auditor for nearly 25 years, says: "There is a motivation among many program people toward the client or industry — by that I mean a school or hospital system — that they are serving. They don't have a high level of concern, characteristically, about preventing fraud and abuse."

Robert R. Elliott, the former general counsel of the Department of Housing and Urban Development, said that administrators of federal programs had a "tremendous tendency" to view stealing as a mere accident. "It doesn't help a program if its constituents are viewed as frauds," noted Reynolds. "Who wants to find his own program full of frauds?"

As the Times put it "administrators of programs, and the sponsors of them in Congress, tend to concentrate on the social problems their programs are designed to alleviate and sometimes look upon controls to prevent fraud as a hindrance."

A perfect example is the summer food service program, set up by Congress to provide 24 million children with meals at more than 16,000 locations throughout the country. Administrators of the program uncovered no fraud. But when the GAO began looking, it discovered evidence of kickbacks, bribes, improper bidding procedures and a host of other illegal or questionable practices.

By MARTHA ANGLE and ROBERT WALTERS

WASHINGTON (NEA) — Although a new Associated Press-NBC News poll indicates the great 1978 tax revolt is not a partisan issue, the Republican Party is doing its best to make it one.

National GOP leaders, undeterred by the survey findings that voters are about evenly divided when asked which party could do a better job holding down taxes, are redoubling their efforts to cash in on the wave of taxpayer resentment rolling eastward from California.

Convinced that the tax revolt reaches far beyond local property levies, Republican strategists are urging their candidates for Congress and state offices to build their campaigns around a call for major tax relief at all levels of government.

They are giving special emphasis to the so-called Kemp-Roth bill, named after Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y., and Sen. William Roth, R-Del., which would slash federal income taxes 30 percent across the board over three years.

Unlike traditional GOP economic proposals, the Kemp-Roth plan does not depend upon massive cutbacks in federal spending. It is premised on the controversial theory of economist Arthur Laffer that lower taxes would ultimately produce more, not less, revenue by juicing up the economy.

The RNC is now shooting a half-hour film on taxes and inflation which it plans to start airing this summer, in whole and in segments, on independent television stations across the nation.

The movie, which has a production budget of $65,000 to $75,000, will also be made available to state party organizations for showings at campaign gatherings or use on local TV where the party groups can afford time buys.

In addition, the RNC and GOP congressional campaign committees are preparing issue packets for distribution to Republican candidates and are exploring other proposals for spreading the word on taxes and their link with inflation.

Last fall, while Proposition 13 was no more than a speck on the California horizon, the GOP National Committee, the Republican Congressional Campaign Committee and the Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee thrashed out tentative plans for an even more ambitious 1978 blitz built around the tax issue.

At the time, however, Senate Minority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr. expressed doubts about the significance of the issue and the cost and effectiveness of an all-out joint crusade. As a consequence, the scheme was shelved. Some of those who favored the plan back then are now darkly muttering "I told you so" behind Baker's back.

Not all GOP strategists are convinced of the wisdom of national party leaders trying to set the tone of campaigns from Hawaii to Maine, whether the suggested focus is on taxes or some other issue.

"I'm leery of the party trying to dictate from Washington what the major issue should be in local campaigns," said Steven Stockmeyer, executive director of the GOP Congressional Campaign Committee.

"I think the big anti-crime push orchestrated by the Nixon-Agnew White House in 1970 backfired on us, and I'm skeptical of that kind of stuff. Still, I have a feeling this inflation-tax thing may just be something we can use successfully as a focal point nationwide."

None of the Republican strategists is ready to predict that the tax issue will be enough to produce huge GOP gains this fall, either in Congress or at the state level. The advantages of incumbency, which accrue primarily to Democrats since there are more of them in office, still constitute a formidable edge.

But for the first time, at least in recent years, Republicans feel they have found an issue that will permit them to take the offensive in the fall, to campaign for something instead of forever opposing Democratic programs.

Your money's worth

'AIM-ers'

St. via Porter

GPM, RAM, VRM — a battery of new mortgage systems? No. These acronyms stand for innovations in a much more prosaic and close-to-the-pocketbook sphere — home mortgage loans. And they are among the variations developing of the traditional, fixed-rate, fixed-term, level-payment mortgage which has dominated the U.S. housing market for almost a half-century.

The major attraction of these "alternative mortgage instruments" (abbreviated to "AIM-ers") is that they are custom-tailored to fit your need and pocketbooks in many categories of homebuyers.

But like many other products especially designed, these new home loans can cost more than conventional mortgages over the long term. Consider, for instance, the GPM, or graduated payment mortgage. This variation is custom-made for you if you are a young person with a relatively low income at this, the beginning of your career, with expectations of a higher income as the years pass. Monthly payments on this type of loan follow the same pattern as your earnings: starting small, growing larger, then leveling off. Say you're a buyer of a home with a $40,000, 30-year mortgage at 9½ percent. Under one graduated payment mortgage plan, you would pay about $255 per month at first, with your payments rising 7½ percent a year for the next five years, then holding.

The attraction: your initial monthly payments would be about $80 less per month than they would be with a conventional loan of the same size.

The drawback, once the five-year graduated payment span is over: you, the borrower, would be paying nearly $30 a month more for the remaining 25 years of the loan.

The net result: you total payments on this GPM loan would be $127,537 against $121,082 on a conventional mortgage, or a difference of $6,455 against you.

The RAM, or "reverse annuity mortgage," is at the opposite end of the life cycle — designed to meet the needs of older men and women who don't want to move out of their homes but who find it tough to keep up with rising property taxes and home maintenance costs.

Under the older homeowners borrow against the equity of their houses to obtain a regular flow of income. Proceeds from their loans are used to buy annuities from insurance companies or, with a reverse mortgage, the payments come directly from the lender. At maturity — after, say, five, seven, 10 or 15 years — the loan can be refinanced or paid off when the house is sold from the borrower's estate.

The variable rate mortgage is probably the most common of the "AIM-ers." It is custom-tailored to the general facts of borrowing and lending in a prolonged phase of inflation rather than the financial need of any class of borrowers.

With a VRM, the monthly payments, length of the loan or a combination of both move up — and maybe down — in tandem with key money-market interest rates. The changes usually occur once or twice a year and there is often a ceiling on how high the interest rate can move. This customarily is 2½ percent over the life of the loan.

If you borrow with a VRM, you frequently can choose to extend your pay-off period instead of increasing your monthly payments. And some lenders allow you, as a VRM holder, to carry your loans with you when you buy another home or permit qualified new buyers to assume the mortgage as its then prevailing rate.

The rollover or renegotiable mortgage is another variation of the inflation-sensitive type of mortgage.

Changes in the loan rate are made much less often than with variable rate mortgages, generally every three or five years. You, a borrower, are sometimes offered an initial interest rate below what you might obtain on a traditional fixed-rate mortgage. This plan is widely used in Canada.

While the savings and loan industry is pushing hard for alternative mortgages — as an assist at a time of steep interest rates and threatened mortgage money shortages — so far, only state-regulated lenders are offering "AIM-ers."

There is growing interest in them in California, New Jersey, Ohio, Tennessee, Massachusetts, Wisconsin and New Hampshire, but federally-chartered institutions cannot move until federal regulations are changed. And this is a change regulatory bodies are reluctant to make without a go-ahead from Congress. Until this nod comes through, conventional mortgages will remain dominant.

COMMENTARY

Donald F. Graff

Americans are saving more of their money.

The savings rate so far this year is averaging about 6 percent of disposable personal income, up from 4.7 percent last year.

Good news? That depends. For the individuals doing the saving it could turn out to be — depending very much upon what lies a short piece down the economic road.

But for the economy in general, it's an omen that has its ominous aspects. Increased savings are a sign not of increased prosperity, as The Conference Board analyzes the current situation, but of public concern over continuing inflation and what it could lead to.

According to a survey of consumer spending trends in the July issue of the economic research organization's magazine, Across the Board, the theory that rising prices spur the public to heavier buying in desperate hopes of beating even higher prices to come is a fallacy.

The vast majority of households hunker down, seeking to offset erosion of real income by curbing spending and salting away as much as they can as a hedge against economic uncertainty.

But more savings means less spending on consumer goods, and a consequent depressing effect on the retail sector of the economy.

That effect, thinly disguised by inflation, is already apparent. Supermarket sales for the first half of this year were up 9 percent over a year ago, but with virtually the entire increase attributable to higher prices.

The sales picture is better in a few areas — most notably autos and department stores. But overall, retailers are getting less of consumers' disposable income this year — 53 percent compared to 54 percent in 1977, and that is even before adjustment for inflated dollars.

Consumer caution is one more contribution to an uneasiness that is spreading among economists. Few are yet predicting a full-fledged recession. But few also see much prospect of preventing economic growth from slowing and inflation from accelerating in the year ahead.

One prediction, from The Conference Board again, sees the gross national product after adjustment for inflation rising only 3.3 percent next year, down from this year's 3.8 percent. Prices, meanwhile, are expected to rise by 6.7 percent, edging up from this year's 6.6 percent inflationary rate.

The word from Washington is that the administration is now focusing on inflation, rather than unemployment, as the top economic problem.

And not a fraction of a percentage point too soon.

Taxing trend

Speaking of upward trends, another bit of economic news couldn't come at a worse time for local governments apprehensive of the spreading taxpayer's revolt.

Property taxes yielded $14.8 billion in revenues during the first three months of the current year, according to the U.S. Commerce Department's reckoning.

This is up 7 percent — in cash terms, about $1 billion — over the same period a year ago and almost twice what it was just five years ago.

Given the current Proposition 13 mood of the electorate, a tax take that not so long ago would have been viewed with satisfaction could prove to be literally an embarrassment of riches.

Costly living
And speaking of riches, Americans living abroad can use plenty of same these days.

The costs of living in a number of the more popular cosmopolitan centers far exceed that at home, according to Business International, which annually surveys the world scene in order to advise firms doing business abroad.

Tokyo retains its title as the world's most expensive city with average living costs rated 56.6 percent higher than in New York, the base city.

In all, 59 cities were surveyed. Europe's costliest are now Geneva and Zurich, having edged out Stockholm and Oslo. The cheapest in Lisbon, at 68.5 percent of the New York standard.

Least expensive of all major world cities is Buenos Aires, where the living is considerably easier at about half the cost of New York.

Belgian neutrality was violated by Germany in both world wars. King Leopold III surrendered to Germany, May 28, 1940. After the war, he was forced by political pressure to abdicate in favor of his son, King Baudouin.

Nation's domestic oil supply to be short in 1990

HOUSTON (AP) — A new energy study indicates domestic supplies, even with reduced demand growth rates, will be insufficient to meet domestic requirements in 1990.

The Shell Oil Co. study says foreign oil and gas imports will thus continue to be the primary source of supplemental supplies used to close the growing imbalance.

Shell's "National Energy Outlook 1980-1990" forecasts oil imports will grow at an average annual rate of 4.3 percent until the late 1980s when they will level off at 11.3 million barrels a day.

Such imports are expected to represent 53 percent of the nation's total oil supply, compared with 39 percent in 1975.

The study forecasts that imports of gas will reach the equivalent of 1.8 million barrels a day in 1990, an increase of more than 200 percent when compared with 1975.

"In 1990, 27 percent of America's total energy supply will come from imported fuels," the report states.

Shell, in an introduction to the study report, asks readers to "keep in mind the forecast is not a reflection of what we would like to see happen. Rather, it projects what we believe probably will occur under our present and foreseen policies and attitudes."

Shell says oil will remain the major source of U.S. energy supply through the forecast period.

"Domestic oil supply, which includes Alaskan resources plus a small amount from coal liquefaction and shale, will remain approximately constant at 10 million barrels a day between 1980 and 1990," Shell said.

"In order to maintain this level, about one-half of domestic production in 1990 must come from reserves which have not yet been discovered."

Of the 11.3 million barrels a day in 1990 oil import requirements, the study adds, 9.9 million will be supplied by overseas sources. Canadian imports will be phased out, but increasing quantities from Mexico are expected to reach 1.3 million barrels a day.

The study indicates total gas supplies, even when supplemented with Alaskan gas, new discoveries in the Lower 48, imports, and unconventional sources, will decline throughout the forecast period.

"Even though domestic supply will decrease, approximately 60 percent of the total gas production in 1990 must come from reserves yet to be discovered," the report states.

"Imported gas from Canada and Mexico, as well as LNG supplies from Algeria, Indonesia, etc., will make a significant contribution. However, even when coupled with the availability of synthetic gas supplies from oil and coal gasification, supplies will be inadequate to prevent an overall decline."

Shell forecasts that the residential and commercial segments of the energy market will account for 1990 for nearly 60 percent of total gas demand.

"The industrial market's use of gas will decline at an average annual rate of 2 percent," the report forecasts.

"Some gas used for processing will be replaced by oil and electricity, and gas use under boilers for both the industrial and electric utility markets will be essentially phased out."

The use of natural gas as a chemical feedstock, the report adds, is expected to remain near current levels in the near term and decline by 1990 when energy requirements will be increasingly met by oil and some coal.

Shell concludes the report by saying its findings point to a continuing and growing problem.

"It is more than just a problem of energy supply," the report states.

"The implications extend much further. Jobs, the nation's way of life, America's overseas trade, and foreign relations are all affected."

Shell adds that it is not the purpose of the report to recommend specific policies.

"But we believe it is apparent our nation's energy goals must be to increase domestic supplies of oil and gas, use the nation's large resources of coal to the maximum extent possible, encourage the development of unconventional supplies such as shale oil, coal-gas and coal-liquids, improve the nuclear regulatory climate, accelerate research and development in solar power and other alternative energy sources, and increase conservation efforts toward improved end use efficiency."

Advice

Dear Abby

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My 14-year-old daughter wants to be "trusted" and I would like nothing better than to trust her, but she has lied to me so many times I have lost count. Last Friday she asked if she could spend the night at a girlfriend's house, so I let her. When I checked with the friend's mother, she told me that HER daughter was supposed to be staying HERE!

My daughter lies to me about where she goes, who she's been with, and just about everything she does. I am worried sick about her. I have tried to get her to go to a counselor, but she won't go.

I am a divorcee, work full time, and have cut my own social life to a minimum in order to be here when she wants me. But she's never around, and I am completely shut out. Please help me.

HELPLESS MOM

DEAR HELPLESS: You are not helpless. Counseling is available for parents who have lost control. You need to learn how to deal with a child who learned long ago how to manipulate you. Your local Family Service Association offers excellent counseling. And if there's a Parents Anonymous in your area, contact them, too.

DEAR ABBY: I love to play Bingo, and I play every chance I get. I hardly ever win, and it really runs into money when you play as often as I do.

My landlord told me if I wanted to win at Bingo, I should get myself a book and study up on it.

I have never heard of a book on Bingo, but if there is such a book, can you tell me where I can buy a copy? E. B.: WINONA, MINN.

DEAR E. B.: I think your landlord is putting you on. Bingo is strictly a game of chance, and if there is a book on how to win at Bingo, I've never seen it.

DEAR ABBY: My daughter was married in a church. We went to a great deal of expense and effort to make her wedding as lovely as possible, and it would have been perfect, had it not been spoiled by a crying baby!

The baby's parents insisted on bringing their 10-month-old child to the ceremony, and when she started to cry and fuss, they allowed her out of the room immediately, they allowed her to cry until her cries became hysterical screams! It was terribly distracting for those who were trying to keep their attention on the ceremony. Needless to say, it wasn't the baby's fault.

It's too late for us, because my daughter's wedding ceremony has already been ruined, but I hope you will print this so others will realize that children who are too young to understand the importance of keeping quiet do not belong at a church wedding.

MOTHER OF THE BRIDE

DEAR MOTHER: I have mentioned this in my column several times, and the number of letters I have received saying, "Babies belong in church" was astonishing.

(P.S. I've visited the Mormon church and congratulated them on the good manners and respectfulness of their wee ones.)

CONFIDENTIAL TO "DAFT" (DEAR ABBY FANS TOGETHER): Your loyalty is deeply appreciated, but your devotion is embarrassing. I don't deserve it. Enough, please.

Are your problems too heavy to handle alone? Let Abby help you. For a personal, unpublished reply, write: Abby, Box 69700, Los Angeles, Calif. 90069. Enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Ask Dr. Lamb

By Lawrence E. Lamb, M. D.

DEAR DR. LAMB — I read in one of your writings that some fish contain polyunsaturated fats. I wonder if you could name the fish for me.

DEAR READER — As a generalization, about one third of the fat in fish of all types is polyunsaturated fat. Some fish are very low-fat fish, for example the flat fishes such as flounder. In these fish, since there is almost no fat to begin with, you won't find much polyunsaturated fat in them.

By contrast salmon, which contains quite a bit of fat, will have a reasonable amount of polyunsaturated fat. The evidence that a marked increase in polyunsaturated fats in the diet prevents fatty cholesterol build-up is rather meager. It is better to limit all types of fat and particularly the saturated fats.

Since only about a third of the fat in fish is saturated fat, fish makes an ideal source of meat protein. The polyunsaturated fat in fish is unique. It is much more unsaturated than the polyunsaturated fats found in vegetables and cereals. Some people think the presence of such highly polyunsaturated fats in the diet is helpful in lowering the blood cholesterol levels.

To give you more information on fish, along with tables to provide the fat values and cholesterol values in different fishes I am sending you The Health Letter number 11-12, Fish and Shellfish As A Health Food. Others who want this issue can send 50 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it to me in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 326, San Antonio, TX 78292.

DEAR DR. LAMB — I am especially interested in what causes bursitis. Will it clear up eventually? Is there anything to do for it except take aspirin? I have had it for about nine months now. I have had two shots but they only gave relief for about 24 hours. I am going on 70 and a female. I do a lot of yard and garden work besides house-keeping.

DEAR READER — Bursae are little sacs filled with fluid. The material that forms the sac looks about the same as the plastic wrap material you have in the kitchen.

These little fluid-filled sacs are cushions around bony prominences, tendons and in the joints and they are there literally to cushion the effects of movement and protect tendons and joints from wear and tear. They can become irritated by injury or a number of different infections, but a high percentage of cases of bursitis occur with no known cause and they're not all easy to treat.

It's common to rest the joint involved to avoid additional physical trauma. In your case if the joints involved are used extensively for yard and garden work when you have bursitis you probably should avoid doing too much of that. Heat is sometimes used to provide some muscle relaxation and relief.

Aspirin is commonly used to help control the pain and when these general measures are not useful, stronger medicines are used including the injection of steroids into the joints. This is very effective in some cases and not so successful in others. A diagnosis of chronic bursitis depends on how long it lasts.

Polly's pointers

Polly Cramer

DEAR POLLY — During any holiday season I tape pictures to the windows for the children's enjoyment. But when time comes to remove them I am always left with adhesive marks on the window glass. Fortunately I remembered a trick we used in the hospital when I was a nurse: if adhesive was left after a bandage was removed then nail polish remover would take care of it (as long as the skin area was not reddened due to an allergic reaction).

Also, try cleaning your stainless steel sink with a bit of rubbing alcohol. It not only makes it shiny but disinfects at the same time. — R.A.P.

DEAR POLLY — One of the best ways I know to dry out children's boots and to remove any odor at the same time is to stuff them with crumpled up old newspapers. This really works and soaks up all excess water from the lining in boots. — DOROTHY

Drill is handy tool

By Herb Alexander

The 1/4-inch electric drill is probably the first power tool the home handyman will buy. It is easily the one most popular power tool around. It isn't just its ability to drill a few holes that accounts for that popularity.

With the multitude of inexpensive attachments and accessories available for the 1/4-inch drill, the tool becomes more versatile, more useful. If you like you can almost turn it into the power unit for a small home work shop.

The basic idea is that the drill provides the power for a number of other tools instead of having each one powered separately.

One useful, inexpensive attachment is for polishing. All you need is a rubber disk with a metal shaft that fits into the drill's chuck. A lamb's wool bonnet is fitted over the disk and tied in place.

Once you've applied wax to your car, for example, you can use the polishing attachment to finish the job instead of rubbing by hand. Polishing attachments are available with a long handle, which will permit you to polish a floor without stooping.

Next is the sanding attachment. Simplest is the same rubber disk and sanding disks, which are available in a variety of grits. This type is useful for removing paint or rust. As with all sanding, start with the coarse grit and use successively finer paper. One trouble with this sort of sanding is that it leaves swirling marks.

More closely resembling hand sanding is the vibrating sanding attachment. Simple and inexpensive is a paint-stirring attachment. When you use it, remember to pour off some of the paint first if the can is full and insert the mixer all the way to the bottom of the can. Turn off the power before removing the mixer from the can.

Screw-driving attachments take screwdriver bits, make a hard job faster and easier. However, if you are buying a new drill investigate the new variable speed models and those that can be reversed. With these it isn't necessary to have an attachment to cut down on power since the drill does it for you.

There are circular-saw attachments that will turn your drill into a small power saw. These come complete with blade guards and adjustments for angle and depth of cut. There also is a saber saw attachment that turns the unit into a portable jig saw.

A grinding-wheel attachment makes the drill an electric sharpener for knives and other tools. But before you use one, get yourself a bench-mounting attachment for your electric drill.

A right-angle drive is just what it seems to be. The unit consists of a housing containing a set of gears so that you can drill and sand at an angle, great for tight spots. But there's another advantage. It will change the speed of the drill, either doubling it or cutting it in half. At a slower speed the drill is more powerful and you can drill large holes in hard materials.

Marriage Takes Its Toll

Marriage costs the typical American couple between $700 and $800 a year in taxes. The Conference Board observes. An unmarried couple making $12,500 each, for example, is taxed at $1,804 per person, for a combined figure of $3,608. A married couple filing a joint return pays $4,304. Under separate returns, they are taxed at $2,211 each, for a total of $4,422.

Survey shows drugs can affect nutritional intake

By Gaynor Maddox

Recent surveys indicate that taking many prescription and over-the-counter drugs can affect our absorption of nutrients from food. On the other side of the coin, the effectiveness of drugs can be altered by the foods we eat.

"Certain drugs can reduce food intake because they cause a loss of appetite, have a sedative effect or cause nausea after food is eaten," reports Daphne A. Roe, professor of nutrition at Cornell University, in a recent issue of "Contemporary Nutrition."

Roe cites amphetamines, sometimes prescribed for treatment or control of obesity, as one such appetite-reducing drug. She fears amphetamines and other drugs may harm patients already eating only marginally nutritious diets.

"For example," she notes, "I found vitamin deficiency diseases in elderly nursing home patients who were taking several different drugs." Some drugs — including certain prescription medicines, antacids, mineral oils and other laxatives — interfere with the body's ability to absorb nutrients, she says.

"Some persons who frequently take antacids develop vitamin D deficiency," says Roe. When the problem occurs, they are simply advised to increase their intake of the vitamin.

Multiple nutrient deficiencies as well as loss of potassium from the body can result from excessive use of laxatives containing phenolphthalein, Roe continues. And users of oral contraceptives, she adds, may have increased needs for several nutrients, including folic acid, riboflavin, vitamin B-6 and vitamin C.

"However," says Roe, "no nutritional deficiencies have been reported due to the use of oral contraceptives alone." In fact, some users of birth control pills actually show an increase in the amounts of certain nutrients, including vitamin A, in their blood.

Who runs the greatest risk of drug-related nutrition problems? According to Roe, the most frequent victims are "long-term drug users who are already at a nutritional risk because of a defective diet, chronic disease, alcohol abuse or physiological stress."

Just as drugs can affect food absorption, drug absorption can be affected by certain foods, food components or eating patterns.

"When drugs, such as aspirin and some sulfa drugs, are taken at the same time as food, their effect is delayed," says Roe. And such drugs as penicillin and tetracycline may lose some effectiveness if taken at mealtime because they may not be totally absorbed in to the system.

Roe claims we have been slow to recognize the relationship between drugs and diet. "Nutrient requirements of persons receiving certain drugs over long periods of time are different from those of people not on these drugs," she concludes, "but unfortunately this fact is not yet generally appreciated."

Roe advises consulting one's physician about possible interactions between food and any prescribed or over-the-counter drug before the risk of nutritional deficiency can occur.

Savings bonds are good buy

NEW YORK (AP) — Banks do it. Stock brokers do it. Mutual fund and insurance salesmen do it.

What they do is suggest to long-term investors or savers an education for their children or a comfortable retirement, knowing that the leveling of taxes and inflation may make such goals mere fantasy.

In the free enterprise world we tend to accept such hyperbole as a consequence of the competitive effort and the reasonable tendency of competitors to create the happiest picture possible.

But what should we think when Uncle Sam also plays the game through U.S. Savings Bonds, of which there are outstanding some $79 billion worth, owned by 25 million households, or roughly one in three?

"Americans earn over $4 billion in interest yearly on their savings bonds," the Savings Bond Division states. But not a word about 10 percent inflation that reduces it to a multibillion dollar loss.

"Here's how your dollars for education grow in Series E Bonds," Uncle Sam announces in a brochure designed to encourage bond purchasers as a way to meet rising tuition costs.

If you buy a $37.50 bond each month from the time your child is born to age 18 you will have accumulated, based on current 6 percent interest, a total of $14,260.94. Before inflation.

What rate of inflation should prevail during the next 18 years? The current rate of about 10 percent seems unlikely. What about half that? Too much? Then let's try 4 percent, a figure likely to be too low.

At 4 percent inflation a year, the purchasing power of that $14,260.94 would be cut in half. You would have invested $8,100. You would have buying power of less than that.

Uncle Sam advertises "A retirement plan that brings you income." It does, of course, but how much? Again, inflation may take away more than the government pays in interest.

THESE ORDERLY PENGUINS could teach army recruits a thing or two about chow line etiquette. However, GIs might become even more unruly at having to eat the penguins' raw fish diet day in and day out. And the freezing polar environment of the penguins' mess hall would make matters still worse. These are among the more than 100 participants in long-term studies of penguin breeding habits conducted by California's Hubbs-Sea World Research Institute.

Carter's relationship with Congress one of frustration

WASHINGTON (AP) — In midsummer Washington a cloud of hot air often obscures the Capitol from anyone strolling up Pennsylvania Avenue from the direction of the White House. If Jimmy Carter ever notices that cloud, his smile likely turns rueful, and his thoughts distinctly darken.

For if Carter has learned anything since he strolled down Pennsylvania Avenue in January 1977, it ought to be that Congress plays a larger role than he anticipated in writing the record of any president.

And one word — frustration — best sums up Carter's relations with the Democratic-controlled Congress.

If there's a dominant mood on Capitol Hill these days, it's a determination to head home by early October to campaign. When that happens, the Democratic leaders will issue statements citing the vast number of bills passed and claiming significant progress in dealing with pressing national problems.

Even Jimmy Carter likely will bite his tongue and find something nice to say about his fellow Democrats, who control both the House and Senate by substantial majorities.

But any realistic assessment of the record of the relationship between Congress and the new president would have to focus on their inability to resolve conflicting interests that dominate issues like taxes and energy.

Add to that the historic tug of war between the executive and legislative branches over which should have the decisive role in domestic and foreign affairs.

The northern tier states with bitterly cold winters have strongly differing views on oil and gas pricing from the southern producing states.

And those conflicting interests have stalemated the Carter energy package.

In foreign policy, the president complained that legislative restrictions imposed by Congress were preventing him from responding decisively to Soviet and Cuban adventurism in Africa.

Congress seemed ready to accept his argument. Republican and Democratic leaders emerged from a White House meeting and said they were prepared to consider any Carter proposals to remove undue restrictions.

The idea quietly faded when the administration failed to come up with any specific measures they wanted repealed.

This week, the Senate will take up the foreign military aid bill and there's a good chance it will use the occasion to try, once again, to enlarge the congressional say in the forming of foreign policy.

A dollar is needed in 1978 to purchase what 60 cents bought in 1970, The Conference Board observes. Prices shot up by 56 percent between 1970 and 1977 and are likely to rise by about 6 percent this year.

The saga of skunk in garbage can

RIDGEFIELD, Conn. (AP) — Lady in a nearby town (unlisted, terra incognita, name withheld to protect the guilty, after the custom of the age) says she has a skunk in her garbage can.

Lady calls the dog warden. "A skunk? Can't help you, lady, we only handle dogs."

"But it can't get out, and I don't know how long it's been there. We've been away for the weekend."

"Sorry, lady. If it was a dog, we'd come right out. Why don't you call the police?"

Lady calls the police. "A skunk! Heh-heh-heh. We catch lots of them. Is it the two-legged kind?"

"What? Of course not, but the poor thing can't get out and we don't want to get too near it."

"Wish I could help you, lady, but two-legged skunks are the only kind we deal with and we got all we can handle right now. Why don't you ring the firehouse? They're always getting cats out of trees and down from telegraph poles."

Lady calls the Volunteer Fire Company. "A skunk? Gee, it wouldn't be fair to call the boys out for something like that. They been up most of the night saving the abandoned brick factory. Why don't you just tip the can over?"

"I'm afraid he might well, you know . . ."

"Do his thing? Let go?"

"Yes."

"They only do that when they're scared . . ."

"I don't know how scared he is, but I sure am and I don't want to get that close."

"Tell you what you do, lady, call the game warden. That sounds like his department."

Lady phones the game warden.

"A skunk? I'm afraid that's not classified as a game animal. Now if it was a deer or a fox or a mountain lion, we'd get right on it."

"You mean you'd come if it were a racoon in the trash can?"

"Racoons don't get stuck like that. Too smart. They'd tip the can over first. Had four of them around our place the other night. Damnedest thing you ever saw. One stood guard, two pruned the steel door of the garbage bin and held it open wide enough for the fourth to squeeze in. What a mess."

"Yes, and it's going to be quite a mess here, if someone doesn't do something soon about that skunk in my garbage can. You don't have Howard Jarvis' phone number, do you?"

"Who?"

"Howard Jarvis."

"You mean that nut case out in California who campaigns for lower property taxes."

"It's called proposition 13."

"I know all about it, lady. And you'd be the first to scream when they start cutting back services. People have got used to their government doing everything for them. You can't turn the clock back, lady. But look, call us anytime. That's what we're here for. And good luck with that skunk."

Oh yes, about that skunk. The lady threw an old blanket cautiously over the side of the can and it got out without government intervention.

There are 6,400 miles of streets in New York City.

Nicklaus adds to legend

By RALPH BERNSTEIN
AP Sports Writer
PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Jack Nicklaus just keeps adding to the legend.

Professional golf's premier player won the $250,000 Philadelphia Golf Classic Sunday. It was his 66th tour victory, second only to Sam Snead with 84.

The $50,000 first prize made it eight straight years that the one-time "fat kid from Ohio" has earned at least $200,000. It was the 16th straight year he's won at least $100,000, boosting his lifetime tour earnings to $3,336,343.

What is there left to maintain his golf incentive?

The 38-year-old Nicklaus had the answer Sunday after he shot a 3-under-par final-round 68 for a record 72-hole total of 270 to beat Gil Morgan by one stroke over the Whitmarsh Valley Country Club course. He wants the grand slam of golf — the Masters, U.S. Open, British Open and PGA all in one year. Even he doubts it will ever be done, but it's all that's left in the Nicklaus world of golf.

His longing was voiced sort of indirectly Sunday. He was asked if he would be back next year to defend the Philadelphia championship he's won three times.

"I've always defended a championship," Nicklaus said.

Then it was pointed out that the Philadelphia Classic in 1979 falls between the British Open and the PGA. The Masters, of course, is in April.

Nicklaus hesitated, then added, "Well, let's say I'll be back if I haven't won the first three (majors)."

The closest any golfer ever came to the grand slam was Ben Hogan in 1953. He won three, choosing for some reason not to play in the PGA.

Nicklaus went home for a few days' rest and a reunion with his family. Then, he's off to Oakmont, near Pittsburgh, to practice for the PGA, which starts Aug. 3.

At Whitmarsh, Nicklaus built a three-stroke lead after two rounds, tying the course record the second day with a 64. He slipped to a 1-over-par 72 on the third round, falling one stroke off the pace. Then, Sunday, he caught up with Bruce Lietzke, passed him and held on to win.

Lietzke shot 74 the final day, stumbling with a double bogey and bogey on the front nine.

When it was over, Nicklaus nipped Morgan, who was two strokes ahead of Jerry Pate and Hale Irwin, each with 273.

Birdie puts on the 11th and 12th Sunday were listed as the key to victory by Nicklaus, although the winning shot was a 30-foot downhill putt on the 16th for a bird. Morgan couldn't make that one up.

After the top four came Hubert Green, who had a hole-in-one on the final round and finished at 274, and Mark Hayes, Lee Elder, Miller Barber and Lietzke, all at 275. The tour's leading money winner, Andy Bean, finished at 276, while U.S. Open Champion Andy North carded four rounds of 1-under 70 for 280.

There were five hole-in-ones in the tournament — by John Schroeder, Danny Edwards, Gene Littler, Jim Mason and Green, a record for any tournament in the memory of veteran golf observers.

Rangers ripped by Brewers' 21 hits

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer
ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Milwaukee's Brewers refused to fold in the American League Eastern Division race, and it's got Manager George Bamberger dreaming of miracles.

The Brewers edged to a thin five games of the Boston Red Sox Sunday night with a 17-8 victory over the unraveling Texas Rangers behind a club record 21-hit attack.

Larry Hisle and Sal Bando each blasted three-run homers and Gorman Thomas slapped a two-run homer in the rout.

"I think miracles are possible, and if we win it, well, it would be a miracle," said Bamberger. "The attitude on this club is fantastic. The one thing this team has had to have is respect because they've never won. I believe they are starting to get respect."

The three-game series sweep gave the Brewers their 12th victory in their past 14 contests and moved Ranger manager Billy Hunter to say, "Milwaukee has really got some mashers."

Milwaukee has eight games left with the Red Sox — three at home.

Bamberger said, "I'd take a 4-4 split right now, because we have 60 other games to play."

"When spring training started, I would have taken a 500 year because this club has never played 500 ball before," said Bamberger. "It would have been an improvement. Now we are 20 games over 500, and I think we can catch Boston."

Bamberger continued, "Why? Because the way the guys are going about their job. They have proved to me that they believe in themselves. They have a positive attitude. Now, we're not as good as the Red Sox because they have more experience than we have. We'll be better in a couple of years."

Bamberger said, "In the next five years, Milwaukee will win, and I just hope I'm with the club. I may possibly stay until 1980 because I want to be part of a pennant. But our kids are all grown and my wife has put up with this long enough. My wife is more important than this game."

The Rangers, who were chewed out in the clubhouse by majority owner Brad Corbett after a 2-1 loss Saturday night, got home runs from Bobby Bonds and rookie Gary Gray, but it wasn't enough to overcome the Brewers' ravaging of four Texas pitchers.

Texas dropped 7½ games behind Kansas City in the AL West, as the Rangers dropped their sixth consecutive game.

Andy Replogle picked up his fifth victory in seven decisions in relief of starter Jerry Augustine.

Ranger rookie Steve Cozer was the victim of the Brewer onslaught as his record dropped to 3-3.

Yankee owner blasted by Martin

By FRANK BROWN
AP Sports Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — New York Yankees Manager Billy Martin, who suspended slugger Reggie Jackson for defiance, may receive similar treatment — or worse — from his boss in the wake of his tirade against Jackson and biting remarks slung at owner George Steinbrenner.

Martin, who held his temper and his tongue when Jackson returned from a five-day suspension Sunday, lost control of both at O'Hare International Airport mere hours after the Yankees had recorded their fifth consecutive victory.

"The two of them deserve each other," Martin told the New York Times, referring to Jackson and Steinbrenner. "One's a born liar (Jackson), the other's convicted (Steinbrenner)."

"I am stunned," Steinbrenner told the Times when informed of Martin's remark, which apparently referred to Steinbrenner's conviction in 1974 for illegal political contributions.

A clause in Martin's contract with the Yankees prohibits him from making public comments critical of the outspoken New York owner. Martin's statement was in direct contravention of the clause and Steinbrenner told The Associated Press, "I'll have further reaction Monday morning."

That reaction seems certain to include severe punishment, possibly even Martin's firing, in view of the manager's contract violation. The statement came in the manager's second burst of fiery, expletive-filled comments made — apparently without investigation — moments after the team arrived by bus at the airport for a flight to Kansas City.

Jackson was suspended after last Monday night's 9-7 loss to the Royals for bunting after a bunt order had been retracted — by signal and by verbal command — during the 10th inning of the 11-inning defeat.

Ultimately, Jackson popped out while bunting on a 1-2 pitch. Martin insisted the defiance of orders had been intentional though Jackson said Sunday after returning from the suspension: "Knowing what the consequences were, the suspension and the amount of publicity it generated, I probably would have swung. I just figured this would be the best way of moving the runner over, but I'd have rather struck out (swinging) and avoided the hassle."

Martin maintained, in his first diatribe, that Jackson knew he was being defiant. "I have never, in my career as a manager, given orders to bunt when there were two strikes on the batter."

"He (Jackson) knew it (that he was being defiant intentionally) and every one of the others knew it. Why else would he take his glasses off when he came back to the bench?"

"He did that because he expected me to punch him and it took the most control it ever has taken in my life not to," said Martin.

The two nearly came to blows in the dugout at Boston's Fenway Park last season after Jackson — in Martin's estimation — failed to hustle while fielding a hit by Jim Rice of the Red Sox.

Neither appeared to make any attempt to communicate with the other Sunday after Jackson returned from exile, and that was fine with Martin.

Before Sunday's game, Martin sniped at the slugger, noting he arrived after optional batting practice had begun.

"It was optional today whether the guys wanted to hit or not," he said, openly irritated. "But you'd kind of think he'd be out there a little early to hit."

Martin was asked after the game if the air would be cleared by an apology or a meeting with Jackson, who did not play Sunday.

"I don't want no apology," said Martin. "I don't believe in any apology when someone deliberately does something on purpose."

That was all Martin said on the matter after the contest. From his office, he went to the media room at Comiskey Park and was observed taking liquid refreshment with his coaches.

Then he boarded the bus — sitting across the aisle and a mere two rows in front of Jackson, who sat next to former New York catcher Fran Healy, his longtime friend and confidant.

Rose hopes to equal hitting record against Mets tonight

MONTREAL (AP) — Pete Rose is glad to be moving to New York tonight to attempt to tie the consecutive-game hitting record after surviving the daylight of Olympic Stadium.

"I've had some great and wonderful things happen to me in New York," said Rose, now one game shy of the league record of 37 set by Tommy Holmes of the Boston Braves in 1945. The major league record is 56 games by Joe DiMaggio of the American League's New York Yankees in 1941.

Rose ran his streak to 36 games Sunday with a single and double before driving in Cincinnati's winning run with a 14th-inning sacrifice fly in a 5-4 victory over Montreal.

Rose continued his hot streak in difficult conditions — roost players agree that the ball is tough to pick up coming into the batter during daylight hours at Olympic Stadium.

"This is the toughest ballpark in the league to hit a ball in," he noted. "I've talked to all the Montreal players, and they don't like to play day games here. It's tough to see when the sun's out and tough to see when the sun's in."

"One time today the sun went down and that's when everybody got all their runs. That's when (Dan) Drissen hit the home run and that's when they came back with their three-run inning."

Drissen hit a three-run homer off Montreal starter

Steve Rogers in the sixth inning to give the Reds a 4-0 lead after Mike Lum's run-scoring single in the third. The Expos scored three times in the bottom of the sixth on a leadoff single by Dave Cash, a triple by Andre Dawson, an RBI ground ball by Ellis Valentine and consecutive doubles by Larry Parrish and Warren Cromartie.

Montreal tied it 4-4 in the eighth as pinch-hitter Sam Mejias stroked a run-scoring single.

Canadian leading bull riders

CHEYENNE, Wyo. (AP) — A young Canadian bull rider and a veteran bareback bronc expert stole the show at the second day of the 82nd Cheyenne Frontier Days Rodeo Sunday.

More than 1,000 professional wranglers are riding in "The Daddy of 'em All."

Bull rider Bob Phipps of Marshall, Saskatchewan, a top Canadian rider who is seeking to break into the United States standings, scored an 84 to take the first go-round lead. Veteran Wacey Cathey of Big Spring, Texas, registered an 80 to take second.

Two-time world bareback champion Paul Mayo of Farmers Branch, Texas, shook off a broken rib and scored a 71 to tie for first in the initial go-round of bareback riding. Kenny Wingate of Eureka, Kan., also scored 71 in the opening day action Saturday.

Phog Allen coached basketball at the University of Kansas for 46 years and his teams won 771 games.

Boxy, Detroit cars start of the worldcar

By DONALD WOUTAT
Associated Press Writer
DETROIT (AP) — If all those boxy, little cars are starting to look alike, you are not hallucinating. You might be getting an early glimpse of "world car."

World car? It is an industry buzz-word as fuel gets scarce and costly and automakers look to the fast-growing market in developing nations.

The result could be cars from Kenosha that look pretty much like those from Nairobi. It could also be that some cars that do not make the grade will go the way of the Henry J, the Studebaker and the Pierce Arrow.

One European economist warns that the sheer wealth of General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co. makes them a threat to major automakers worldwide as they aim toward developing a universal car.

Ford, GM and Chrysler Corp. already build nearly half the 30.8 million cars turned out annually around the world.

The trend toward a world car already is causing global reverberations as industry giants seek to expand, governments rush to make their countries attractive as plant locations and labor unions hold meetings to talk about worldwide collective bargaining.

It is hard to find two people who agree on a definition of the world car. But they agree it is not a new idea — it is 67 years old, in fact.

The Model T appeared in Detroit in 1908 and was being assembled in England just three years later. By 1920, the sturdy little cars were being put together in Brazil, India, Denmark and Spain.

The auto industry has been international ever since. In 1967, for the first time, more cars were built outside than inside North America.

And today's supposed world cars — the Volkswagen Rabbit,

Ford Fiesta and Chevrolet Chevette are cited — come closer than the Model T to being international products. While the overseas Model T was largely built with U.S. parts, the Fiesta is the product of 16 parts and assembly plants in six European nations, coordinated from Dearborn.

VW's Rabbit-Gulf-Caribe sequel to the Beetle — the second world car — is made in West Germany, the United States, Mexico, Indonesia and Yugoslavia. The Chevette is the same basic car as GM subsidiaries build in England, Germany, Brazil, Australia and Japan.

Chrysler this year combined features of its French-built cars and introduced the first U.S.-built front-wheel-drive small cars, the twin Dodge Omni-Plymouth Horizon — and at the same time started building the identical Simca Horizon in France.

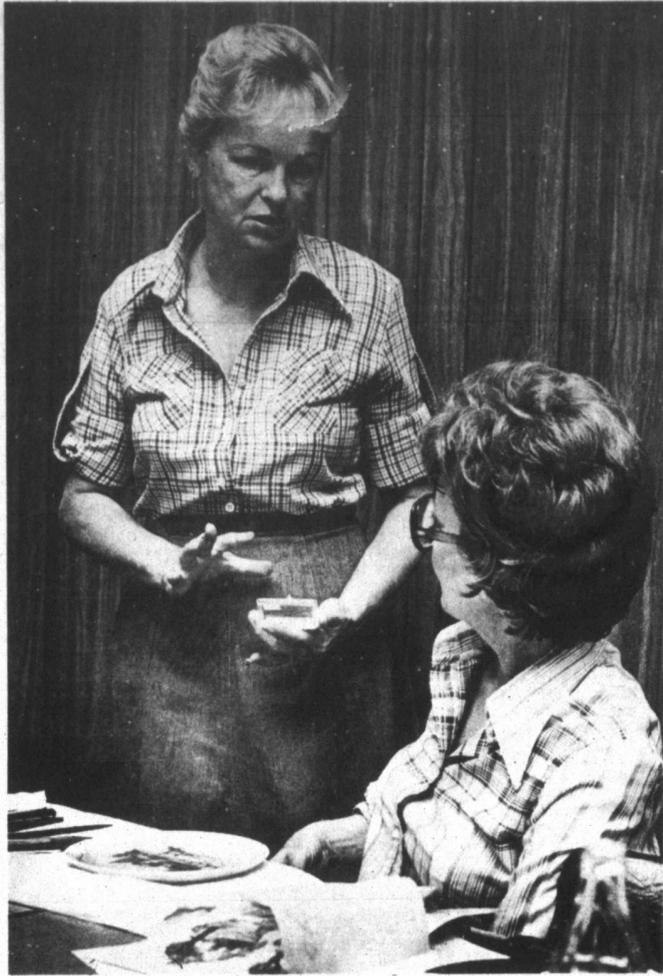

Most versions of these similarly styled international cars are put together with at least some locally produced parts that do the work of models built in other countries.

Such across-the-border standardization of parts, as opposed to identical cars worldwide, is regarded as the test of a world car.

"The story isn't so much identical cars as engineering cooperation and components exchange," says a Ford analyst. "The world car just doesn't exist in the image people want it to exist."

How did everybody come up with a boxy design? Because of the fuel shortages that sent prices up and prompted a U.S. requirement for gasoline economy — which translates into a need for smaller cars.

"You can get more in a box than a ball," says a Ford research man.

Twain: a summer selection The five boons of life

By Mark Twain

One
In the morning of life came the good fairy with her basket, and said:
"Here are five gifts. Take one, leave the others. And be wary, choose wisely; oh, choose wisely! for only one of them is valuable."
The gifts were five: Fame, Love, Riches, Pleasure, Death. The youth said, eagerly:
"There is no need to consider"; and he chose Pleasure.
He went out into the world and sought out the pleasures that youth delights in. But each in its turn was short-lived and disappointing, vain and empty; and each, departing, mocked him. In the end he said: "These years I have wasted. If I could but choose again, I would choose wisely."
Two
The fairy appeared, and said:
"Four of the gifts remain. Choose once more; and oh, remember — time is flying, and only one of them is precious."
The man considered long, then chose Love; and did not mark the tears that rose in the fairy's eyes.
After many, many years the man sat by a coffin, in an empty home. And he commended with himself, saying: "One by one they have gone away and left me; and now she lies here, the dearest and the last. Desolation after desolation has swept over me; for each hour of happiness the treacherous trader, Love, has sold me I have paid a thousand hours of grief. Out of my heart of hearts I curse him."
Three
"Choose again." It was the fairy speaking. "The years have taught you wisdom — surely it must be so. Three gifts remain. Only one of them has any worth — remember it, and choose warily."
The man reflected long, then chose Fame; and the fairy, sighing, went her way.
Years went by and she came again, and stood behind the man where he sat solitary in the fading day, thinking. And she knew his thought:
"My name filled the world, and its praises were on every tongue, and it seemed well with me for a little while. How little a while it was! Then came envy; then detraction; then calumny; then hate; then persecution. Then derision, which is the beginning of the end. And last of all came pity, which is the funeral of fame. Oh, the bitterness and misery of renown! Target for mud in its prime, for contempt and compassion in its decay."

Four
"Choose yet again." It was the fairy's voice. "Two gifts remain. And do not despair. In the beginning there was but one that was precious, and it is still here."
"Wealth — which is power! How blind I was!" said the man. "Now, at last, life will be worth the living. I will spend, squander, dazzle. These mockers and despisers will crawl in the dirt before me, and I will feed my hungry heart with their envy. I will have all luxuries, all joys, all enchantments of the spirit, all contentments of the body that man holds dear. I will buy, buy, buy! Deference, respect, esteem, worship — every pinchbeck grace of life the market of a trivial world can furnish forth. I have lost much time, and chosen badly heretofore, but let that pass: I was ignorant then, and could but take for best what seemed so."
Three short years went by, and a day came when the man sat shivering in a mean garret; and he was gaunt and wan and hollow-eyed, and clothed in rags; and he was gnawing a dry crust and mumbling:
"Curse all the world's gifts, for mockeries and gilded lies! And mis-called, every one. They are not gifts, but merely lendings. Pleasure, Love, Fame, Riches: they are but temporary disguises for lasting realities — Pain, Grief, Shame, Poverty. The fairy said true; in all her store there was but one gift which was precious, only one that was not valueless. How poor and cheap and mean I know those others now to be, compared with that inestimable one, that dear and sweet and kindly one, that steps in dreamless and enduring sleep the pains that persecute the body, and the shames and griefs that eat the mind and heart. Bring it! I am weary, I would rest."

Five
The fairy came, bringing again four of the gifts, but Death was wanting. She said:
"I gave it to a mother's pet, a little child. It was ignorant, but trusted me, asking me to choose for it. You did not ask me to choose."
"Oh, miserable me! What is there left for me?"
"What not even you have deserved: the wanton insult of Old Age."

The ins and outs of 23-channel

By Ink Dipper

No, you can't sell or lease your used 23-channel CB unit. But, yes, you can continue to operate it.

Probably no ruling made by the Federal Communications Commission has created as much confusion among CBers as the order in mid-1976 that banned the sale of 23-channel units in favor of the new 40-channel sets with more rigid technical specifications to reduce television interference and increase the outlets available to CB users. It went into effect on Jan. 1, 1977.

In a recent trip that covered 15 states, many jambores, and a lot of coffee get-togethers with CBers from Florida to Nebraska, these were the questions that were asked most often. The ruling states clearly that no citizens band radio can be sold that has not passed the FCC's specifications. It is totally silent on the matter of use and, therefore, makes continued operation of these units legal.

This column has touched upon this subject several times in the past, but we didn't realize that there was as much confusion over it as this trip indicates. We have protested the way in which the FCC decided to handle the increase in channels that CBers had been requesting for many years prior to the 1976 ruling.

The FCC's peculiar delayed-action timing increased the number of 23-channel sets on the market by millions. This meant that the TVI incidence simply was multiplied. It also broke many manufacturers who were faced with taking back 23-channel sets then in the distribution pipelines and converting them to 40 channels. And the public was subjected to a flood of inferior 23-channel sets at prices that made them very attractive, all to beat the Jan. 1, 1977, deadline.

There are, of course, a lot of other questions that the main one of sale generates. Can you give away a 23-channel unit? Sure, if it is to another member of the family, and was purchased before the Jan. 1, 1977 deadline. Can it be given away as a door prize for a church bazaar? Probably the commission would consider this an incentive, but it would be okay.

A dealer can take your 23-channel unit in trade against the purchase of a 40-channel radio because, in the FCC's ruling, that would take the 23-channel set out of the sales stream.

Can you sell an RV, a van, a mobile home, a pickup truck with a 23-channel unit in it? Yes, if its permanently installed in the vehicle.

NEW YORK (AP) — City Comptroller Harrison J. Goldin says that if New York makes a serious bid for the 1984 summer Olympic Games it should consider sharing the games with Boston.

Goldin suggested in a letter to Mayor Edward Koch that Olympic events could take place in Boston and New York City as well as in cities between the two. Los Angeles is considering withdrawing its bid to host the Olympics because city officials have no guarantee against cost overruns.

MONTREAL, N.C. (AP) — Evangelist Billy Graham has denied a report of possible improprieties or violations of federal tax laws in the purchase of a tract of land near Asheville, N.C., by his World Evangelism and Christian Education Fund.

An aide to Graham issued a brief statement in which Graham said the report was "filled with unsupported and untrue innuendoes and insinuations." The Charlotte Observer had said the purchase of the 1,050-acre tract by the Graham organization for $2.75 million raised questions about the value of the property and compliance with IRS laws.

ETNA GREEN, Ind. (AP) — A 79-year-old sheriff says it was a pair of hired gunmen — not the FBI — who killed Public Enemy No. 1 John Dillinger outside a Chicago theater.

Harley Person, sheriff of Kosciusko County, Ind., at the time, says the gunmen — known to him only as O'Neil and Zarkovich — were hired by the town of East Chicago, Ind., and killed Dillinger outside the Biograph Theater the night of July 22, 1934. Person said East Chicago hired O'Neil and Zarkovich after a bank robbery attributed to Dillinger that resulted in the death of a school crossing guard.

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — William H. Gleysteen presented his credentials to President Park Chung-hee today, succeeding Richard Sneider as U.S. ambassador to South Korea.

Gleysteen, a career diplomat, last served as deputy assistant secretary of state for east Asia and Pacific affairs.

HONG KONG (AP) — Air and surface parcel postal service between Hong Kong and Vietnam will be resumed Aug. 1, the post office announced. The service was suspended three years ago after the Com-
