Record bass caught at Lake Stamford

It's not just another tall fish tale; this big one did not get away! It's true, and it's on record.

Early Tuesday morning, Mar. 15, Venus Holmes of Littlefield, who has a place at Lake Shore Sites at Lake Stamford, caught a record-breaking 8.5 pound big-mouth bass using only a little piece of bologna for bait.

While in Haskell early Tuesday afternoon with J. D. and Joyce Harrell, her neighbors from the lake, she came by the Free Press office with the big bass that broke her fishing rod as she brought it in after it took the bologna bait.

While they were here visiting, Joyce Qualls from Lake Stamford called our office to report that the bass Holmes caught was indeed the largest big-mouth bass ever caught at Lake Stamford. According to the game warden, the previous big-mouth bass caught there weighed 6.3 pounds.

Qualls reported that Holmes also caught an extra large catfish last fall using bologna as bait. Both of the big catches were taken from one of the canals at the lake.

Aside from all of the expert fishing advice given by professional anglers, it seems that Venus Holmes' philosophy and winning method of bringing in the big ones may well be, "Hey, whatever works."

During the evening, new chamber officers and directors will be installed.

Also at the banquet, the Chamber's 2004 Citizen of the Year Award will be presented.

Tickets for the catered dinner are $10.00 each, and may be purchased from any Chamber of Commerce member or at the chamber office.

Athletes to raise money in benefit game March 26

The girls' game will begin at 6:00 p.m., with the boys' game following. Graduates from even numbered years will play graduates from odd numbered years.

An entry fee of $15.00 will be paid by each participating player. All proceeds will go to the Haskell Educational Foundation, which awards mini-grants to local teachers each year to enhance learning opportunities for their students, beyond the scope of the regular school budget.

The community is urged to attend the event during the Easter weekend and enjoy the fun of seeing exes of all ages participate together in the games.

Arthritis, Calories and Exercise: Finding the Right Balance

In that great old television series of the 1970s, "The Mary Tyler Moore Show," one of my all-time favorite episodes is the one where Mary's neighbor, Rhoda, is about to eat a chocolate. Rhoda suddenly stops, looks at the chocolate and says, "I don't know why I'm bothering to put this in my mouth—I should just apply it directly to my hips!"

Chocolates aside, even though we all know we're supposed to "eat healthy," for most of us the benefits of eating a healthy diet are less immediate and more long-term; what's important is the long haul. But the situation can be more complicated for people who suffer from rheumatoid arthritis (RA), the most common autoimmune disease.

RA affects about 1 percent of the U.S. population, and as much as 5 percent of people over age 60.

You may not think there's much of a connection between rheumatoid arthritis and diet—but you'd be wrong. In fact, there are three important diet-associated aspects to RA. First, those who suffer from RA actually have a higher "resting energy expenditure." That means that their bodies burn up more energy even when they're not being physically active. Second, they have what's called "elevated whole-body protein catabolism," which is a destructive form of muscle metabolism that leads to wasting of the muscles. Finally, they have low body cell mass, which translates to increased fat mass.

One question that's interested researchers at the Jean Mayer USDA Human Nutrition Research Center on Aging, operated by the Agricultural Research Service in Boston, is whether people who have rheumatoid arthritis should actually increase the number of calories they consume, to make up for that elevated "resting energy expenditure."

If you have arthritis—and I do—you know that sometimes it just plain hurts to move, so people who have RA tend to be a little less active. This sets up a vicious cycle: The arthritis discourages them from exercising, and that less physical, more sedentary lifestyle can lead to overall gains in fat mass. When you combine the higher fat mass with a lower muscle mass, the end result can be an increased risk of disability.

Getting back to the original question—does the higher "resting energy expenditure" caused by rheumatoid arthritis mean those folks should consume more calories?—the researchers in Boston wanted to find out what impact that higher resting rate might have on people's daily total energy expenditure and, by extension, what their daily energy requirements really are.

The researchers studied 20 healthy women plus 20 women who had RA. All of the women had a similar weight and size. The researchers measured or estimated the women's total energy expenditure as well as their energy expenditure during rest and during exercise.

The findings: Even though the women with rheumatoid arthritis did have a higher "resting energy expenditure," overall their low energy expenditure from lack of physical activity was directly linked to a lower total energy expenditure. Being less active meant they needed fewer calories—period.

But is exercise really worth the struggle for people with RA? Based on the results of another study done several years ago at the Boston center, the answer appears to be "Absolutely!" In that study, middle-aged volunteers with RA actually improved the strength of their major muscle groups by an average of 57 percent after three months of resistance training. They walked faster, had better balance and reported feeling less pain and fatigue.

The volunteers in that study did twice-a-week workouts on chest press, leg press, leg extension, back extension and abdominal curl machines set at 80 percent of the maximum weight each volunteer could handle. They worked out with a group of healthy people in their 20s, and another group in their 70s. Overall, the RA patients had a larger gain in strength than the healthy individuals, even though they started the study significantly weaker.

As always, if you're thinking of starting an exercise regimen, you should first check with your doctor to make sure the type of exercise you're considering is right for you. But these studies certainly give you something to think about!

Mission Possible Group to be in Rochester April 16

The Mission Possible group of First Baptist Church in Wichita Falls will be in Rochester Sat., April 16 for a very special day of spiritual outreach, praise and worship. Ranging in age from teenagers to senior citizens, this group of about eighty members looks forward to joining our community in a day of fellowship and celebration.

Activities will start about 10 a.m. with coffee get togethers in homes and at the Literary Club Building. Members from the Mission Possible group will join those at each location meeting for coffee.

Pre-teens, teenagers and college age youth will gather at the Ermine Mullino home at 10 a.m. for games and fellowship. The Wichita youth will later pair with local youth in a door-to-door outreach across the community.

At 2 p.m. the Mission Possible participants will present a concert uplifting Christ with a variety of musical praise. Fourth street, north of the Rochester ISD campus, will be blocked off for the concert. A hamburger meal will be provided, courtesy of the Wichita group.

College students need insurance

Health problems can occur at any time. College students on their own for the first time need to think about medical insurance. Students may be covered by their parent's health insurance, while some colleges and universities provide limited health care as another option.

But, that should be carefully investigated too. Some jobs offer insurance; Extension recommends asking at the interview. In any case, young adults should check on their insurance status before leaving home.

This Week's Devotional Message:

HE IS RISEN

'Christ is risen!' And once again on Easter morning, the miracle of His resurrection brings joy and inspiration, as we gather together in the house of the Lord, with our families and friends: to worship, to rejoice, to give thanks for His gift of life everlasting. May this Eastertide bless each of us with infinite trust in the goodness of life, hope for the future and faith in the spiritual truths that sustain us.

Indians defeat Tigers

The Haskell Indian Baseball team has gone head-to-head with the Anson Tigers in their last two competitions. On both occasions, the Indians have come from behind to defeat the Tigers.

In the first game, played in Haskell, it took a base-clearing grand slam by Brandon McClatchey in the bottom of the sixth inning to edge out the Tigers in a 9-7 victory. Ronald Chapman and Brad Blanks combined for the pitching performance.

The second game, played in Anson, would take the Indians eight innings to overcome the Tigers. In the top of the eighth, with the score tied 5-5, Blanks would hit a 2-run home run over the center field fence to take the lead. Kendall Mitchell pitched a solid six innings, with Chapman coming in the seventh in relief. Blanks got the last out of the eighth inning for the save.

This improved the team's record to 8-1 for the season.

The Indians will start District play in Paducah Thurs., Mar. 24 at 4:00 p.m.

The JV game scheduled for after the Varsity game, has been cancelled since Paducah did not have enough players.
