

Three suffer minor injuries in rollover crash

Three individuals suffered minor injuries after a one-vehicle accident on 4th Street, in front of University Medical Center on Thursday afternoon.

While traveling westbound on 4th Street, the female driver of a dark green Kia Sportage 4X4 overcorrected her steering after attempting to avoid an obstruction with her vehicle, Lubbock Police Department Corp. R.B. Mendoza said.

As the Kia traveled down 4th Street, another vehicle, traveling westbound, pulled into the turn lane, he said. Upon entering the turn lane, Mendoza said he speculated the driver was spooked by the approaching vehicle and conducted an evasive move.

After the evasive move, the female driver overcorrected the steering wheel, without hitting the other vehicle, and caused the Kia to overturn, Mendoza said. Although Mendoza said he could not release any other information concerning the driver, the passenger of the Kia was a 17 year-old male. Also, in the backseat, a one year-old infant was strapped into a baby seat.

As the Kia overturned, the crash caused debris from the vehicle's lights to scatter across three lanes of traffic on the east-bound side of 4th Street. Fortunately, Mendoza said, all three of the occupants of the Kia were not severely injured. Each individual was taken to University Medical Center for further examination, he said.

Enthusiasm cooks during Hub City BBQ Cookoff

By Brittany Fish/The University Daily

The smell of barbecue filtered through the air as Texas Tech students and members of the Lubbock community celebrated the third annual Hub City Barbecue Cookoff in the Buddy Holly Center parking lot Thursday.

Misty Lemke traveled from Dallas to attend the event. She said her aunt was one of the sponsors of the cookoff.

"The barbeque is excellent," Lemke said. "It's such a nice environment, good food and good music."

Alex Contreras, a freshman undecided major from Lubbock, said he attended the barbecue for the free food and beer.

"The food is good, music is good, it's a good time," he said.

Dan Alderson, volunteer chairman of the Hub City Barbecue Cookoff, said the event's main goal is to benefit Lubbock and the Lubbock Chamber of Commerce.

"It's a fund raiser to help them do what they do best—find jobs for the community," he said. "Bringing people to the best community there is — Lubbock."

Last year, the cook-off sold about 1,100 tickets, Alderson said.

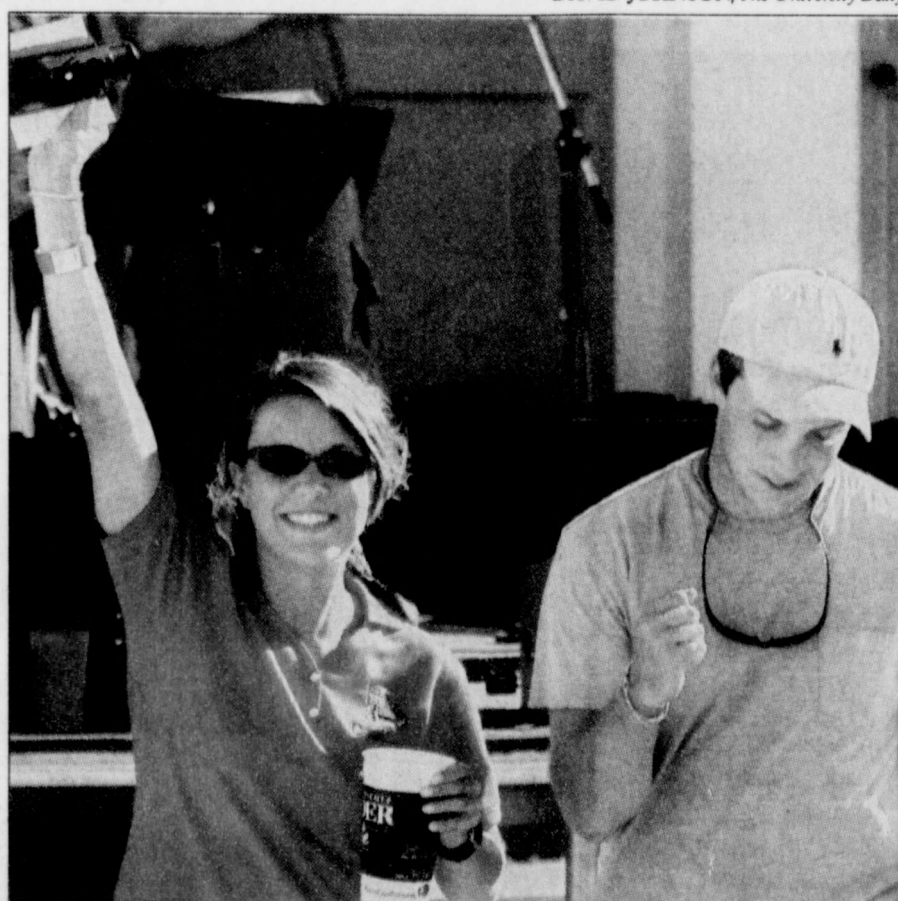

"We're hoping to grow and be bigger and better this year," he said. "Dr. Michael Shonrock and President Whitmore were very supportive."

Alderson said the 37 cooking teams divided into three categories to compete for the best tasting barbecue. The individuals were placed in professional, corporate and amateur divisions, he said.

Volunteer judges, including Tech President Jon Whitmore, and professional chefs judged the participants, Alderson said.

"It's just a great event," he said. "It's great for the community because you can bring the whole family."

Alderson said support from the Tech community is needed to make the barbecue a success.

"We really need the Tech spirit to come out," he said. "That's the biggest thing we can get out of Tech."

Mary Jane Short, vice president of business development for Lubbock Chamber of Commerce, said volunteers make the cook-off a success.

"Our committee makes this happen," she said. "This is a really great event for people to have a good time and network. I see a lot of Tech students out here today, and we appreciate that."

Richard Dyer, a resident from Amarillo, attended the cook-off.

Tech student soon to be deployed to Iraq

By Katherine Amerson/The University Daily

Gunshots and the sulfuric smell of gunpowder are not a part of most students' lives. However, for Eric Escamilla, it is exactly what he signed-up for.

The senior exercise and sports sciences and health major said he is soon to be deployed to Iraq.

He found out about his journey Monday at about 10:30 p.m. and will leave Saturday for California. He will come back to Texas on Tuesday for more training, and then be shipped to Iraq.

Escamilla is the only person in his reserve unit who is leaving for Iraq but does not fear going alone.

"I'm not scared, I'm nervous having to go to combat with guys I've never met before," he said. "I thought they sent units to combat, I didn't think they'd pull me out of my unit."

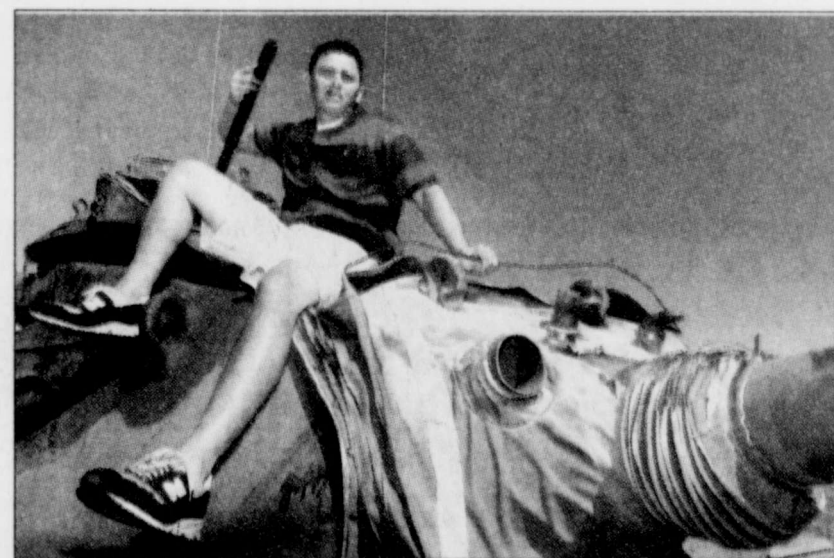

His father, Tony Escamilla, said he does not understand why his son is being added to a unit in California, and, as an ex-veteran from the Vietnam era, he said he has never heard of a person being pulled from a unit because it is important for soldiers to bond with their unit before combat.

"Just like in football or baseball, you get to know what each other are thinking, it's more efficient," he said. "He'll make friends, he's very sociable."

The short notice was surprising to Eric Escamilla.

"I thought they were supposed to give you at least a 30 day notice, but I guess not," Eric Escamilla said. "I think my training is good enough that I don't have to be scared."

Tech political organizations voice concerns about election

By Jackie Schirard/The University Daily

With the presidential and congressional elections around the corner, Texas Tech political organizations are promoting and voicing their political agendas. James Hershberger, president of the University Democrats, said their goal is educating about issues.

"This is what will make people want to vote," Hershberger said. "West Texas and Lubbock are mostly conservative, but if they came to one of our events, maybe more questions would be raised. Then, they could research and figure out if they really are more liberal or not."

Hershberger said the University Democrats will have a former CIA member speak at one of their meetings.

"We support liberal philosophy, and knowing that Kerry will probably lose the vote of this state, our efforts will be more symbolic," he said. "I don't feel Bush is a bad president, but I feel Kerry would make a better one. This age of terrorism is unprecedented, and I feel that some of the members in the Bush Administration are trying to manipulate people's fear. It's infringing on people's privacy and religious beliefs in some cases."

Hershberger said he does not understand why the United States is in Iraq right now.

Jet goes off Lubbock runway during training

LUBBOCK (AP) — A military training jet from Wichita Falls went off the end of a runway at the Lubbock airport early Thursday during a practice touch-and-go landing.

A Lubbock International Airport official said when a tire on the jet blew out it hit some birds.

"The pilot elected to abort the takeoff and obviously got on the brakes and ran out of pavement," airport deputy director Steve Nicholson said.

Neither the student pilot or the instructor on board were injured when the T-38 Talon aircraft from Sheppard Air Force Base went off the runway about 9 a.m., Sheppard spokeswoman Lt. Brooke Brander said.

The Lubbock airport is used regularly, Brander said.

About 250 pilots from the United States and other countries are trained annually at Sheppard, according to the base Web site.

Bill prevents Supreme Court ruling on pledge

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House passed a bill Thursday that would prevent the Supreme Court from ruling on whether the words "under God" should be stricken from the Pledge of Allegiance.

In a politically and emotionally charged debate, Democrats said majority Republicans in the chamber were debating the Constitution in order to force a vote that could hurt Democrats in the election.

Supporters insisted that Congress has always had authority to limit federal court jurisdiction, and the legislation is needed to protect an affirmation of religion that is part of the national heritage.

The bill, which was passed 247-173, would prohibit federal courts, including the Supreme Court, from hearing cases involving the pledge and its recitation and would prevent federal courts from striking the words "under God" from the pledge.

Gunmen kill three in early morning attack

GAZA CITY, Gaza Strip (AP) — Palestinian gunmen made their way into a heavily fortified Israeli army post in the Gaza Strip under cover of morning fog Thursday and started shooting, killing three Israeli soldiers in a 45-minute firefight.

Two attackers were killed soon afterward, but a third hid near the post for several hours before firing on journalists inspecting the scene, wounding an Israeli newspaper reporter in the leg.

The infiltration came as Israeli forces wrapped up an operation in a nearby Gaza refugee camp amid signs of increasing tensions and violence ahead of Israel's planned withdrawal from Gaza next year. The earth-and-concrete outpost guards the isolated settlement of Morag in the southeast corner of Gaza. Taking advantage of heavy fog, Palestinian gunmen slipped unnoticed into the post at about 6 a.m. and opened fire.

Trinkle: Merrill Lynch knew of Enron scandal

HOUSTON (AP) — Several Merrill Lynch & Co. executives knew Enron Corp. pushed hard for the brokerage to buy interest in three barges by the end of 1999 so the energy company could book the profit, a former credit analyst for Merrill Lynch said Thursday.

But the analyst, Tina Trinkle, was concerned enough about the hurried deal and an unwritten promise that Merrill Lynch's interest would be bought out in six months that she kept paperwork related to it years after she resigned.

"I knew there was something wrong with the deal, and I didn't want it to come back to me," said Trinkle, the first Merrill Lynch insider to testify in the conspiracy and fraud trial of four former executives of the brokerage and two former midlevel Enron executives.

Tobacco co. tries to discredit FDA head

WASHINGTON (AP) — The tobacco industry tried to discredit a former head of the Food and Drug Administration Thursday after he backed out the federal government's assertion that cigarette-makers manipulated nicotine levels to hook smokers.

The Justice Department alleges in its $280 billion civil racketeering suit against the industry that for decades tobacco companies lied to the public about smoking dangers.

David Bernick, representing Brown and Williamson Tobacco Corp., asked former FDA Commissioner David Kessler whether he was an "expert in the field of nicotine addiction."

Kessler replied that he was not. The cross examination followed written testimony Kessler submitted earlier.

Jeanne kills more than 1,100 people in Haiti

GONAIVES, Haiti (AP) — Hungry, thirsty and increasingly desperate residents attacked each other in a panic to get scarce food and water Thursday as workers struggled to bury hundreds of corpses six days after the city was struck by Tropical Storm Jeanne.

More than 1,100 were killed and 1,250 are missing, and the toll was rising. The storm left 250,000 homeless in Haiti's northwest province, which includes the port of Gonaives.

Health workers feared an epidemic of disease in the country's third-largest city from the unburied dead, overflowing raw sewage, lack of potable water, and infections from injuries. Some people already were falling ill.

Forest Service workers alive despite crash and cold temps

SEATTLE (AP) — Two Forest Service workers who were believed killed in a fiery plane crash huddled together to stay warm in the freezing temperatures of the Montana wilderness, and one was in such excruciating pain that he had trouble bending over to get water from a stream, a doctor said Thursday.

New details of the workers' miraculous survival emerged Thursday as one of their doctors held a news conference to discuss their recovery, and their families described the shock of learning the news just as they were making funeral arrangements.

"We were putting together his obituary," said Matthew Ramige's mother, Wendy Becker. "We were consoling each other and the Forest Service rushed in and told us we had to get to the hospital because he walked out. We were in disbelief."

Ramige, 29, and Jodee Hogg, 23, walked away from the Monday crash in northwest Montana and emerged from the wilderness on a highway Wednesday afternoon, a day after both the Flathead County sheriff and the U.S. Forest Service had announced their deaths. Three others died in the crash.

Hogg was in stable condition

Thursday at Kalispell Regional Medical Center in Montana. Ramige was in serious condition at a Seattle hospital with a spinal fracture and burns over 20 percent of his body on his hands, face and chest. But his doctor said he should fully recover and be back at work by next spring.

Dr. David Heimbach said the pair endured temperatures that fell to 20 degrees by huddling together to stay warm. They remained by the plane for a day and a half, hoping someone would come to rescue them, but he decided to walk when no one arrived, he said.

Ramige, who will be at Harborview Medical Center for about a month, was in intense pain during his trek, Heimbach said.

"His biggest trouble was trying to bend over to get some water out of the streams," he said. The crash occurred near the southern edge of Glacier National Park. The workers intended to conduct an annual vegetation inventory and repair telecommunication facilities, but crashed in stormy weather about 15 minutes into the flight.

"It's just an unbelievable miracle. You look at that crash site, that wreckage, you'd never believe anyone could have survived," said Flathead County Sheriff Jim Dupont. Dupont said the aircraft went from more than 100 mph to zero in less than 40 feet.

"Who can survive that?" Dupont asked. A fire "literally melted everything."

Heimbach did not discuss how the pair survived the wreck itself, and Becker said she had not asked her son about the crash because she thought it would be too traumatic.

Undersheriff Chuck Curry, who heads the search-and-rescue team, said he met with family members Wednesday evening who were upset about the premature declaration that all five people aboard had died.

Curry said he looked around the crash site for signs that anyone might have survived.

"There were no footprints leaving the site, no piled rocks, no written message — nothing indicating anyone had survived or left the area," he said. "I specifically searched for those kinds of signs."

Ramige's grandmother, Clara Becker, spent the past two days making funeral arrangements for Ramige in Pittsburgh, where he grew up, when she got the call from her daughter that Ramige survived.

Fear of draft reinstatement haunts U.S.

By Abby Peterson/
Badger Herald

(U-WIRE) MADISON, Wis.— As the death toll in Iraq climbs and U.S. military resources and personnel are stretched to their limits, many fear the military draft is well on its way to being reinstated.

Some University of Wisconsin-Madison students, afraid the war on terrorism is failing, have taken an increasingly pessimistic view of the Bush administration's policies — in large part because they feel the president's decision to intervene in the Middle East could eventually require them to serve in the military.

"Students who are already concerned about the war in Iraq are thinking about it," said Liz Sanger, chair of the UW College Democrats. "The war is going badly, and there is a sense of anxiety among people our age that this will turn into Vietnam."

Indeed, both houses of Congress have proposed bills to reinstate the draft since the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks. The measures would apply to men and women between the ages of 18 and 26; college students would not be exempt. Congress would need to pass one of the bills before the president could sign the proposal into law.

Yet despite heightened fears of a coming draft, many experts contend that though the military is unquestionably understaffed, it will never reverse its 1973 decision to end the draft.

"Even though there is a need there — I think it is too premature to think seriously about it," said assistant political science professor Jon Pevehouse, adding the protests and problems that erupted from the Vietnam War era taught the Pentagon to avoid fighting a war with draftees.

Although Pevehouse admitted he does not foresee a U.S. military draft resurfacing in the near future, he does believe the Bush administration would offer individuals more incentives to serve, like signing bonuses and increased pay, as well as taking "intermediate steps" toward extending tours of duty.

UW political science professor Donald Ferree agrees, saying the Pentagon could prolong service so long those individuals who signed up for military service find themselves participating in what essentially "amounts to a draft." In fact, Milwaukee and Madison's 32nd Military Police Company tour in Iraq was unexpectedly prolonged this summer, forcing local soldiers to continue serving past their normal schedule for duty.

Even if the sense of urgency that motivated drafts during WWII and the Cold War no longer exists, Ferree contends the possibility for a full-fledged military draft should not be ruled out.

"Never say never," he said.

And as the presidential election draws near and some voters view the coming race as a referendum on the Bush administration, many Democrats urge young people to consider the threat of a resurrected draft when voting this fall.

Sanger urges Kerry's plan to invite international allies to participate in the Iraq conflict would take the pressure off the U.S. armed forces, thus diminishing the need to call up a non-voluntary army. In addition, she points to Kerry and Bush's respective military records as reason to vote for the Democratic ticket this election, most notably drawing a distinction between Kerry's service in Vietnam and Bush's lack thereof.

"We have a president who does not understand what it's like serving in a foreign country, fighting in an unpopular war," Sanger said. "I don't think he values the sacrifice being in the service really is."

But Bush supporters say Democrats are using the draft issue as a political ploy to win Kerry the election.

"(This) argument the liberals are using that if Bush gets re-elected he will reinstate the draft ... is a liberal scare tactic," said Jessi Schober, co-chair of Students for Bush.

Schober added Kerry's plan to fight international terrorism is weak and does not support the military.

"Essentially Kerry's plan is retreat. Let the world take over and get out of (Iraq)," she said. "Bush believes in the troops and believes the troops can get this done."

Democrats counter that no matter the Republican rhetoric, Bush's policies prove he does not support the troops.

"I'm surprised to see any veteran for Bush because he doesn't represent veterans," Sanger said, pointing to veterans' healthcare benefits the Bush administration cut during the last four years. Sanger added disagreeing with the president's policies does not mean Democrats are necessarily anti-military.

Officials to make over Hub City image

By Andrew Bell/
The University Daily

Before entering school at Texas Tech, students could have heard rumor Lubbock has a tendency to stink, and there is nothing fun to do.

Image is everything, and the Lubbock Chamber of Commerce, along with other organizations and residents in the Hub City, are beginning a new initiative to let people of the city, region and state understand what the city has to offer.

Officials from the city of Lubbock and Tech met at the Science Spectrum Thursday afternoon for the unveiling of the new image campaign.

Brad Moran, general manager of Ramar Communications and the head of the committee for the upcoming lubbocktexas.com Web Site, said it is time residents took more pride in the city they call home.

"How many times have you been around people that apologize about being from Lubbock?" Moran said.

The program would be an inward-focused campaign directed at the people of Lubbock, Moran said, to give them the permission to brag about the Hub City.

Mayor Marc McDougal said Lubbock has a little of everything to offer the population. Although Lubbock contains the Cactus Theater, the United Spirit Arena and Tech athletics, he said people should not forget about activities outside the city limits, such as Lake Alan Henry.

The people, weather and the stress-free atmosphere were three of the main points Moran said as to why he stayed in Lubbock after graduating from Tech.

Since March, the Lubbock Chamber of Commerce has been working on the image campaign, "Lubbock — the Giant Side of Texas," and, Moran said, after the unveiling, would begin to initiate the program with the support of a variety of Lubbock organizations.

Officials from the Chamber of Commerce could not be reached.

Essentially, McDougal said the program would arm Lubbock residents with information that could be used to inform others of the activities and opportunities of the city.

The largest aspect of the initiative involves advertising from papers, radio, television stations and billboards, he said. In total, Lubbock media outlets have provided $1 million for promotions in the next year, for a program that would have an initial start of three years.

However, the program also would use a variety of technologies to present the image campaign to Hub City residents, Moran said. Later in the year, lubbocktexas.com will provide information on the history and heritage of the city. Also, he said, the Web site would contain a calendar of events to let residents know of upcoming activities.

Aside from the Web site, Moran said videos would be displayed on local television station during the week to start the initiative. Before displaying their findings, however, the city needed to know what residents thought of the Hub City.

During the chamber's Community Image and Promotions Divisions focus groups, Moran said Lubbock residents complained the entertainment offerings provided by the city were slim.

Although many residents may agree, he said the initiative would let residents be aware of the things available here that may not be anywhere else in the state. This also is a common complaint with Tech students, as well. LeAnne Gibson, a junior communications studies major from Ruidoso, N.M., said during her tenure at Tech, it has been difficult to find activities on any particular evening.

"As for Lubbock, I've never been aware of much to do," she said.

Usually, Gibson spends her spare time involved in activities with her church or at the Stars and Stripes Drive-In Theater, she said.

However, Moran said, as the initiative gets underway, Tech students and Lubbock residents should be able to find a number of activities available throughout the city, including music, business and recreational activities.

"The big part is to let the people know we have [entertainment offerings]," he said, "and to let them know where they are."

Cookoff

Richard Dyer, a resident from Amarillo, attended the cook-off.

"I own a barbecue restaurant in Amarillo and have been involved in an event like this for 10 years," he said.

Dyer said his committee in Amarillo brought in 96 cooking teams and had to turn people away because of the increased popularity.

"This event here is in its infancy," he said. "This is just ready to bust at the seams."

Dyer said the cookoff will be a success for years to come because of the individuals who put the event together.

"About 95 percent of them are good folks," he said. "They are all just wonderful people. If you have the right people trying to make Lubbock a better place it will be a success. They want you to love being here."

Eddie McBride, president and CEO of the Lubbock Chamber of Commerce, agreed he wants people to realize what Lubbock has to offer.

"We're gonna start bragging about how good it is to be in Lubbock," he said.

McBride said an event like the cook-off is important to bring the community together.

"It is a community even where everyone can have a good time," he said. "We couldn't do it without Texas Tech."

Deployed

Even though he is proud to serve his country, he said he wishes he could finish college before he goes to Iraq.

"I only lack 11 hours of Spanish to graduate, and the government doesn't really care," he said. "I would be the first person in my family to graduate college."

Tony Escamilla said he is proud of the man his son has become.

"He has a good head on his shoulders, and he is a very smart and intelligent man," Tony Escamilla said. "Everybody is really proud of him."

Paul Bain, a senior public relations major from Houston, said he thinks going into the military is a noble venture, and said his brother is probably going to enlist in the military.

"I think it's huge that people are heading over to fight," Bain said. "When people go into the military and then come back to college, they've learned about the real world; they come back much better prepared for their experience here."

Being deployed was not something Eric Escamilla said crossed his mind when he joined the military.

"I joined the army to serve my country, and it was a good way to pay for college," Eric Escamilla said. "I joined the reserves because I joined a unit I thought wouldn't be deployed."

The deployment news has affected more than just him.

"I don't think people realize to the extent it affects the families of the soldiers killed, unless they know somebody over there," he said. "My dad told me I should have gotten out of the reserves a long time ago. My family is sad to see me go; everybody's kind of still in shock."

Although the soldier is upset he has to leave, he said he will return.

"It angers me when I turn on the TV and see another soldier has died," Eric Escamilla said. "I'll be back."

Do not take chances at all, wear a bullet proof vest and keep your eyes open was Tony Escamilla's advice for his son, and do not let your guard down.

"I'm concerned, I've been concerned for several months because of the terrorist thing, I just prefer he finish school; if you get called up, you get called up," he said. "I'm praying — he's the only biological son I have."

"I think we got more than what we bargained for. In the events of 9/11 and hostage situations in Iraq, it only takes a small amount of people to do a lot of harm, and we have to be careful," he said. "I'm not clear on the motives of the war, but I think the way they went about doing it was wrong. I felt like I was lied to."

Hershberger said the congressional race for District 19 between U.S. Rep. Randy Neugebauer-R-Lubbock, and U.S. Rep. Charles Stenholm, D-Abilene, is an interesting race.

"These two guys have very similar policies, but Stenholm is more what Lubbock is looking for," he said. "Stenholm has so much experience with his lengthy career in Senate, and Neugebauer is relatively young."

Even though Stenholm appeals to Lubbock's ideals more, Hershberger said he wonders if the citizens of Lubbock will vote for Stenholm since he carries the Democratic label.

Joe Biles, president of the College Republicans, said the organization's goal is to provide a conservative, Republican view to students.

"Students are out on their own for the first time, and so they are exposed to many different ideals to form their own opinions about their political affiliation," Biles said. "We want to educate these students on the Republican views, and in a pragmatic sense, register and encourage students to vote."

Biles said President Bush will clearly win the Texas vote.

"We are planning on going to New Mexico and campaigning there," he said. "We are also encouraging students who are from New Mexico to vote on an absentee ballot, because Bush needs votes in that state."

Biles said Bush has contributed in Pell Grant funding, reaching an all-time high as well as keeping the unemployment rate to 5.4 percent.

"This is historically low for the past four decades," he said. "In regards to the war on terrorism, I think we are struggling to win peace, but democracy is a difficult process. Saddam has had a record of supporting terrorism, and I think Iraq is better off now that he's gone."

Biles said he wants to encourage conservative students not to cast split-ticket votes.

"Stenholm is conservative on policies, and I commend him on that," he said. "But, he's voted against repealing the debt tax, hurting family-owned farms. This is wrong because it's a big violation of the constitution for property rights."

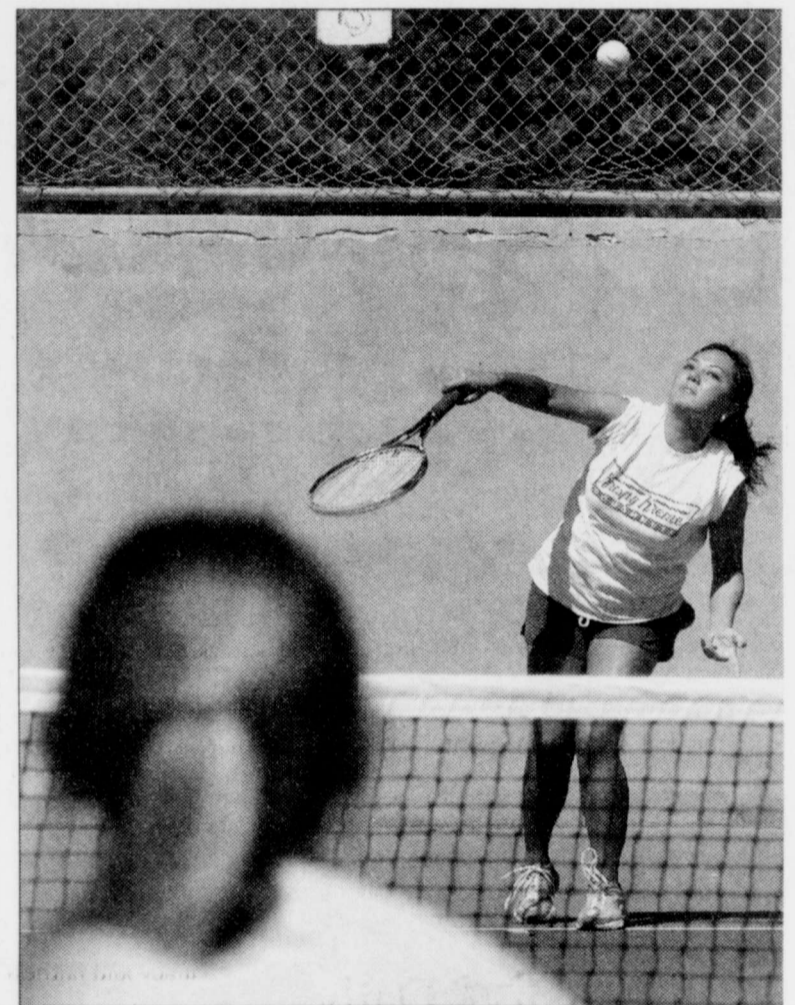

Hayden Mills, vice president of the Young Conservatives of Texas, said his organization is non-partisan and is dedicated to the preservation of individual liberties and freedoms through limited government.

"We prepare ratings of the state legislature as a public service to people in Texas," he said. "We lean towards grass-root politics during the election campaign for conservatives, and we also lobby for representatives of the state legislature."

Mills said the organization does not know enough about Neugebauer and Stenholm yet to endorse a certain candidate, but the endorsements will come out in the next two weeks.

Hershberger and Biles said the University Democrats and the College Republicans will have a debate about domestic issues at 7 p.m. Tuesday in the basement of the English/Philosophy building.

Hispanics — in a heated battle for the vote

It is Hispanic Heritage Month, and all over America, people are celebrating the many accomplishments of Hispanics. This month is a time for Hispanics to show pride in their culture and heritage.

It is hard being a Hispanic in the United States, because, as a group, we sometimes are forgotten. In issues of race, we are often overlooked.

Most of the attention paid to Hispanics is negative. The only time Hispanics are seen in the media is when a prominent Hispanic is in a hit movie, legal trouble or when Jennifer Lopez is getting married.

Yes, Lopez's many marriages do give a Hispanic much attention, but as often as it may seem, it is not enough. But this is beginning to change.

As the Hispanic population grows, so does our power. We are gaining power as consumers and citizens. More and more, Hispanics are getting attention. I have seen and heard many television and radio advertisements targeting Hispanics.

These ads are for many different products, ranging from clothing to cars.

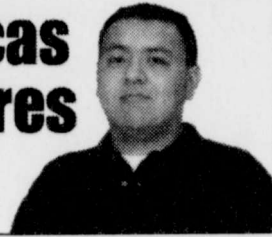

Some of the ads are in Spanish, but the majority is in English. These ads are not only on the Spanish television stations, they also are on many of the English networks. During this election year, we also are attracting the attention of the two main political parties.

Republicans and Democrats alike are coming after our votes, even though we may as well be invisible when no campaigns are being run. In politics, whenever Hispanics are mentioned, it usually has to do with immigration.

Now, the two major presidential candidates, George W. Bush and John Kerry, are talking about other issues that involve Hispanics. These issues are not just Hispanic issues, but they seem to come up more often when targeting the Hispanic vote.

We hear about better education, home ownership and better health

Lucas Flores

We hear about better education, home ownership and better health care. These are not just Hispanic issues — these are major issues for Americans. We, as Americans, should not be broken down into categories of race. But it never fails, we always will be.

care. These are not just Hispanic issues — these are major issues for all Americans. We, as Americans, should not be broken down into categories of race. But it never fails, as many people as possible.

According to news reports, Bush will make a speech at the Hispanic Heritage Month Concert in the White House, while Kerry will speak at the Congressional Hispanic Caucus Institute's 27th Annual Gala Dinner.

Both are trying hard to get the support from Hispanics because the poll margins are small. More Hispanics are registering to vote, and more and more Hispanics are researching the candidates because the election is important.

Though many reports have much of the Hispanic vote going to Kerry, many more Hispanics are undecided on whom to support.

The election is important to Hispanics, and all Americans, not only because of terrorism and the war in Iraq, but because of the many other issues, too.

Do not get me wrong, I like all the attention. Let's face it: Hispanics are only targeted about every four years.

Reports say the nearly 40 million Hispanics living in the United States have had growing influence in U.S. elections. The same reports say Hispanics are especially important this year because many live in four states considered key to the November vote — Florida, Arizona, New Mexico and Nevada.

This gives Hispanics even more power, but puts a bigger bull's eye on our backs. Just imagine how much of a target the Hispanics in Florida are.

In Texas, we are lucky we are not a swing state. Just imagine how the people in those states are targeted with relentless political ads airing 24 hours a day.

Every other commercial is probably a political ad, and among those how many specifically target Hispanics? How many are in Spanish?

I do wonder how you say "flip-flop" or "war gone wrong" in Spanish.

GUEST COLUMN

Woods still blind to America's race dilemma

In response to the column written by Kevin Woods titled "Race a risky factor in college admissions," (UD, Sept. 9) I was more saddened than angered. It is sad to see many people are still oblivious to the fact that racism still exists in American culture. However, Woods' column seems to portray his own sense of racism. How ironic. Woods said diversity quotas in individual classrooms would set a new precedent in institutional diversity. Instead of registering for classes according to classification and last name, students would be prioritized by race. Minorities would go first: Asians and whites last.

When speaking of minorities, it is fair to assume Woods meant blacks and Hispanics, because clearly, Asians — those of Middle-Eastern descent and Indians — also are minorities. A look at the enrollment facts of fall 2003 shows of the 28,549 students enrolled at Texas Tech, Asians make up 2 percent of the population, which is probably close to the same national aggregate figure. So why are they not considered minorities?

What I am so concerned about is Woods suggests, "Minority students have an equal opportunity to apply and gain admission to our university." The use of "our" suggests minorities do not belong to this university, which is another insight into Woods' attitude toward minorities on campus.

The fact remains that America is still highly racist and discriminatory, though it is not seen in the forefront. Racial discrimination has evolved through the years, making it less easy to detect unless viewed under a microscope. Also, Woods suggests imposing a "quota" in admissions processes for minority students would diminish the quality of students that come to Tech. These admissions tactics are used to aggressively pursue those minority individuals who would usually take their academic record to schools such as University of Texas, Texas A&M, Rice, Baylor or any other prestigious university. Tech wants those bright minds at this school. To suggest Tech would admit anyone to fulfill a quota would undermine the integrity of our university system. Tech does need to have a more realistic image of the outside world; it is the coming together of diverse cultures and ethnicities that makes this country great. To the admissions department, I applaud you — keep making Tech the place it needs to be: a place of exemplary education, rich culture and diverse minds.

What Europe has taught me to love about America

As my friends and I began our travels of Europe, we expected to be wowed by the amazing monuments, but didn't expect to be humbled by the small things we take for granted.

My roommates Mary and Jillian ventured to Pompeii, Sorrento and the Isle of Capri this weekend despite threats of rain. They came back with fabulous pictures, great stories and appreciation for the smaller things in life.

"When I was younger, I never gave a second thought to the type of toilet paper my family used. When I got to college, I came to appreciate the two-ply my parents kept at home, as opposed to the one-ply provided in my college dorm. Now that I've been to Pompeii, I appreciate any toilet paper, as there was none to be found anywhere in Southern Italy!" says Chicago native Mary Spadoni.

Everyday mundane tasks that seemed so simple at home are now a little more challenging. At home, I am used to separating my laundry and throwing it in the washer and dryer while I go on about my day. In Florence, I was excited by the presence of the washing machine. However, I never stopped to notice the lack of a dryer. My roommates and I now have to hang our clothing on a clothes line suspended between the windows of our apartment. The first time I did laundry, I set my clothes out to dry. An hour later, they weren't even close to being dry, and it started to rain. My clothes were finally dry late the next afternoon. So much for wearing my favorite shirt out on the town that night.

Shopping for groceries has become a task that requires much more planning than driving to the nearest United, throwing a variety of food in the basket,

Sara Miller

As much as I complain about my male-dominated department in petroleum engineering, I realized those boys do not smell, and they are smart enough not to have a running commentary about my body when I can hear them.

loading the bags in the car and heading back home. The grocery stores we have found in Europe are much smaller, carry a limited selection and all items purchased must be carried home in bags, usually costing about five cents. Since we live about a mile away from the nearest grocery store and up 57 steps, we have to take all this into consideration when making our selections.

Lake Tahoe native Andria Gutierrez and I had a conversation one night about how many times at home we jump into our cars to drive a short distance.

"When I'm in Tahoe, I don't even think twice about driving three blocks to the store because it's the norm. Here in Italy, people walk everywhere and don't think twice about it. They know they have to get from point A to point B, and they walk the distance," she said.

While I used to wonder how Europeans had such amazing bodies with all the carbohydrates they eat, now I know — they walk everywhere!

Texas Tech senior Mary Beth Koeth had a different take on what she took for granted at home.

"I have realized that I love the way American men know when to give you space and I especially love how American men know that the mullet is something that should never make its way back into existence. I love how I'm admitting that I've taken American men for granted!" the design communications major from Dallas said.

At first I laughed, but then I realized she was right. As much as I complain about my male-dominated department in petroleum engineering, I realized those boys do not smell, and they are smart enough not to have a running commentary about my body when I can hear them. Today, while walking to class, I actually heard one man comment on my "nice hips."

If I had been walking down the hall in petroleum engineering, someone would have been slapped. But those comments are just another piece of the "cultural experience" in Florence.

Learning to live in another country is definitely more than visiting the museums and monuments, and I feel certain we will all face more startling revelations as the semester progresses. So, as we set off to Rome this weekend, we expect to be wowed by the Coliseum and the art in the Vatican Museums. But this time, we're taking a roll of toilet paper with us.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Thank you voters, for showing you do have a choice in elections

I want to thank the more than 82,000 Texans who signed our petition to have Libertarian Party candidates on the Nov. 2 ballot. More registered voters wanted to sign, but unfair state laws prohibited them. Only Libertarians, Democrats and Republicans will be on the ballot in Texas this year. It is unfortunate Texas has the most difficult ballot access laws in the U.S., and independent candidates such as Ralph Nader are excluded. The Libertarian Party thinks voters should choose their representatives; the major parties think they can rig elections by choosing the voters. Voters should be empowered, not party bosses. I hope you appreciate having another Texan, Michael Badnarik, on the ballot and appreciate the choice of Libertarian candidates for federal, state and county offices on Nov. 2. — Patrick J. Dixon, Chairman of Libertarian Party of Texas

QUITTERS CAN SOMETIMES PROSPER

By Lauren Clonts/
The University Daily

People quit their jobs for countless reasons, ranging from lack of opportunities to simple unhappiness with the position.

David Kraus, director of the Texas Tech Career Center, said leaving an employer on good terms is important.

"Give ample notice when leaving a job," he said. "We never know in this world when we might want to come back or at least we'll need a reference from our current employer sometime down the road."

Give at least two weeks notice before leaving, but, for professional positions, a month or more is better, he said.

"It's not always possible to do this, but it's a good idea whenever feasible," Kraus said.

Robert Schindell, Director of the Career Management Center in the Rawls College of Business, said to leave a job ethically.

"All that is left after you leave is your memory, so think about how you want to be remembered," he said. "Leave things better than you found them."

Kraus said not to make any negative comments about the employer or co-workers.

"Nothing is gained by speaking poorly of your boss, and it will usually come back to get you later," he said.

Be up front and honest with the current employer when seeking a new job, he said. Keep him or her informed of interviews, particularly if a second interview takes place, he said.

"No one likes to feel like they were blind-sided, and most employers understand that young people do change jobs fairly often early in their careers," he said. "But don't pursue another opportunity unless you're genuinely interested."

Kraus said seeking a new position because of short-term discontent with a current employer is not wise.

"You're going to have temporary unhappy times with any job or boss," he said.

Explain the reason for leaving to the current employer, he said.

"Whether it's a professional advancement, a higher salary, a better opportunity for a spouse or a move to a place you've wanted to go for a long time, most employers understand these things, as we have all experienced those, also," he said.

Suzanna Ramirez, a math major from Smyer, said she gave two weeks notice at her last job and was able to use that employer as a reference.

"I would never just stop showing up for work," she said.

Greg Jones, executive vice president of business development at American State Bank, said not burning a bridge with an employer is not a good idea.

"You do want to be able to use them as a reference," he said. "Ask the supervisor if you may use him/her as a reference."

American State Bank, and other businesses often conduct exit interviews with employees who are leaving, he said. One of the purposes of the exit interview is to identify any problems in a company, cooperating is important, Jones said.

"If I were leaving, I would want to have 're-hirable' stamped on my record," he said. "Because you never know when you might be back."

If possible, offer to help train the replacement, he said. Be as cooperative as possible, Jones said.

"Even if you are asked to leave or are laid off for some reason, I would try to have an exit interview scheduled," he said.

Training someone before leaving a job can be beneficial by helping a person determine his limitations and areas of weakness, Jones said.

"Don't just quit or not show up," he said. "That's not good at all."

Feminist does not equal man-hater

By Kandis Wenk/
The University Daily

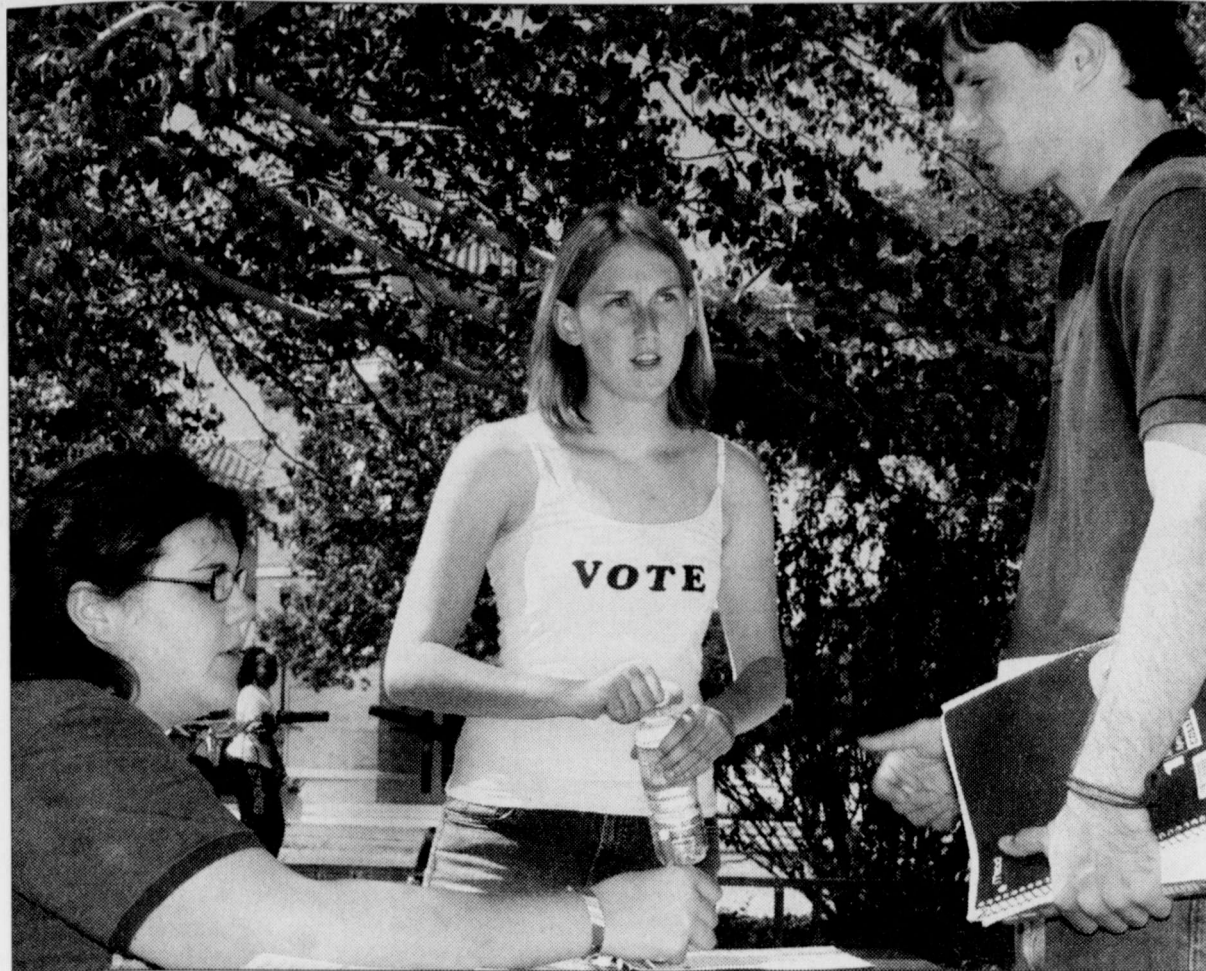

Some people associate feminists with bra burning and man-bashing, but Texas Tech students taking feminist classes say they have a different perspective. Eddie Holland, a senior human development and family studies major from Los Angeles, said he believes in the feminist platform. "I feel really strongly that women should have equal pay and equal rights," he said. "If women do the same work as men, I don't see why women can't be paid the same." Holland said his experiences in the classroom at Tech are a prime example of this. "I've learned more from my women professors and in my women's studies courses than from my male professors or other classes," he said. "It seems like all the male professors want to do is talk about and show how intelligent they are." Being hassled by his friends is something Holland said he has learned to deal with. "A lot of my male friends think I'm a traitor," he said. "They don't understand that it's not about male bashing; it's about equality." Holland said there are many false stereotypes about feminism, including ones based on sexual orientation. "It's not about being gay or being a lesbian, it's about being a person," he said. "I'm sure that not all feminists are gay, although men seem to think they're all lesbians." Shelby Baba, a senior English major from Lubbock, said most people are feminists, even if they do not know it. "If you think women should vote, have equal pay, go to school and have a choice over their body, then you're a feminist," she said. "Don't perpetuate negative things over something you don't know about." Charlotte Dunham, director of women's studies, said the true definition of feminism has been misconstrued over the years. "A feminist is someone who is concerned about the position of women in society," she said. "They learn how issues come about and try to find solutions to those problems, so they're not a bunch of man-haters."

Contrary to popular belief, feminism was around long before the women's movement of the '60s and '70s, Dunham said. "Feminism has been around since before the United States became a nation," she said. "People were saying to include women in the statement of rights and that women needed to be considered." Dunham said feminism has changed in response to changes in the world. "Back when women couldn't vote, own property or have custody of their children those were the issues," she said. "Now the goals lean more toward equal participation, equal rights, things that come as women's place in society has changed." As far as the strength of feminism is concerned, Dunham said it depends on how a person looks at it. "If you look at the opinion polls today, the support for women's right is stronger than ever," she said. "The actual women's movement has really come and gone with key issues." Fighting false labels is one of the biggest issues that feminists face, Dunham said. "The common stereotype is that feminists are all alike and all radical, which isn't true," she said. "There are a whole range of ideas that feminists have." The common misconception is that feminists are out to overthrow business." The hardest thing about being a feminist is the negative connotation the word has, Shepperd said. "There is a difference between hating men and not liking the fact that the world is stacked to favor men," she said. "Very few feminists are men-haters." Stephanie Shepperd, president of the Feminist Majority Leadership Alliance, said the organization has been active on campus for about five years. Shepperd said individuals who are interested in learning more about feminism should attend their meetings every Thursday at 6 p.m. in room 213 of the Administration building. "Our goal this semester is to choose where to work, what they want to do, what they think," she said. "So, it's about my body being my voice heard."

Bernie Mac steps up to the plate

'Mr. 3,000' almost strikes out in theaters but slides into safety with mediocrity

After succeeding in second-fiddle roles in a variety of films, ("Bad Santa," "Head of State," and "Friday" to name a few), Bernie Mac, one of the "Original Kings of Comedy" finally gets his own movie.

It's just a shame that movie had to be "Mr. 3,000," a semi-likeable and nearly laugh-free sports movie.

Mac is certainly one of the best comedians to gain prominence in recent years. His stand-up act is a scream, and his Emmy-winning TV show, "The Bernie Mac Show," is consistently smart and funny.

He also is not one of these comedians that are only funny in an R-rated setting (Chris Rock).

"Mr. 3,000" would have been likely to completely strike out had they not cast Mac as a cock-sure baseball player whom fans and media love to hate.

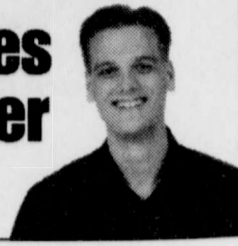

Mac is Stan Ross, a first base player for the Milwaukee Brewers, who hopes to get a spot in the hall of fame by gaining 3,000 career base hits.

He is a player who spells "team" with an "L."

On the day he finally gets that 3,000th hit, he goes into the stands and snatches the ball from the child who caught it. He promptly announces his retirement, despite the fact the Brewers are in the middle of a pennant race.

But Ross cares more about doing commercials and collecting endorsement checks.

'Mr 3,000' never swings for the fences, but the talented Mac keeps it from being thrown out at first.

Nine years later, Ross continues to identify himself as a living legend and has started a 3,000-themed shopping center, but is still wondering why he hasn't been admitted into the hall of fame.

He convinces Brewers owner (Chris Noth, no longer Mr. Big from "Sex and the City") to have a "Stan Ross Day" at the stadium where they would officially retire his number.

As he is being considered for the Baseball Hall of Fame, a statistician finds an error in Ross' record. In a game that was discontinued, Ross' three hits were counted twice.

"Mr. 3,000" is actually only "Mr. 2,997."

It doesn't have the same ring to it.

So Ross, now 47 years old, decides to come out of retirement to get three more hits.

He finds the new Brewers team to be a bunch of young, cocky upstarts like he used to be, and finds it difficult to fit back in.

As expected, Ross comes to find what it truly means to be a sportsman, manages to unify the team in the process, and gains a newfound respect for life.

Ross also has a past relationship with an ESPN reporter, Mo Simmons (Angela Bassett, "What's Love Got to Do With It?") who comes back to cover his comeback for her network.

Bassett is one of the film's best features, because she refuses to simply be the love interest. She gives her character depth as she scorns Ross for his pomposity and holds him accountable for his actions.

Another treat is the great Paul Sorvino ("Goodfellas") as the Brewers manager who never speaks a single word. He conveys so much through a glance or gesture that his power on screen is undeniable. When he does speak, however, it's priceless.

"Mr. 3,000" is an 85-minute movie that gets stretched into 110 minutes. It becomes obvious the comedy is running low on gas as Ross waffles between showboating and being a team player.

One particularly pathetic foul ball is a "Tonight Show" bit that signals the film is officially running on fumes.

Give Mac credit for his charisma that keeps this movie from being an entire flop. Though he is not given a funny script to work with, Mac proves he is a comedian who can rise above the material.

"Mr. 3,000" never swings for the fences, but the talented Mac keeps it from being thrown out at first.

Teens invade health clubs Health insurance falls short

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — At a growing number of health clubs, gyms and YMCAs across the country, the treadmills and barbells aren't just for adults anymore.

While experts debate whether it's a good idea, more teens and "tweens," or preteens, are hitting the workout circuit to get in shape.

The trend also is driven by parents worried about childhood obesity while schools cut physical education classes. Not to mention health clubs which see the potential for a new moneymaking market.

Clubs belonging to the International Health, Racquet & Sportsclub Association reported 4.5 million members under the age of 18 in 2002, a 25 percent increase over the 3.6 million in 1998.

Of those 4.5 million members, nearly three-fourths were ages 12-17, said Brooke MacInnis, a spokeswoman for the association.

"The overarching problem is that kids are not getting enough exercise, and the health club industry is trying to respond," MacInnis said. "It is becoming very popular for health clubs to open up to children."

MacInnis said about a fifth of the association's members who answered a survey in 2002 were offering junior programs, and she expects that to grow.

"Historically, teens and tweens have been doing things like swimming or playing basketball," MacInnis said. "You are going to see more and more specialized workouts for kids."

Whether youngsters, particularly preteens and early teens, should be doing individual training is still a matter of debate.

While the National Strength and Conditioning Association, the American College of Sports Medicine and American Academy of Pediatrics all say supervised, moderate workouts are fine, some people worry developing bodies can be damaged by weight or cardio workouts.

"It's a myth that started 20 or 30 years ago, and it's absolutely false," said Avery Faigenbaum, a professor of exercise science at the College of New Jersey, in Ewing, N.J.

"Kids really need places to become physically active," he said. "In this age of budget cuts in schools, it's not happening there anymore. Rec centers tend to be more sports-oriented, so the kids who aren't good at sports don't go. There is a niche that health clubs could fill."

Faigenbaum stresses young people must be supervised, especially with weights.

"I am in no way saying that an 8-year-old can come home from school and go into his basement and do weight training," he said. "They absolutely have to be supervised. Health clubs should either offer supervised classes or nothing at all."

Some health clubs still resist the idea.

"Their bodies are just not ready for it," said Mary van Thullenar, a manager at Dale's Athletic Club in Overland Park, Kan. "It would do more damage to have them do those exercises than to do things like swimming, floor drills, conditioning, aerobic classes."

Dr. John Acquaviva, an associate professor of health and human performance at Roanoke College in Salem, Va., said young people generally don't train hard enough to damage their bodies.

But he still believes people under 16 shouldn't do serious training because of the risk of injury and because they quickly become bored.

"I'm concerned about burnout," Acquaviva said. "If they start to believe that working out is regimented, boring and a punishment of some kind, that lessens the chances of them continuing to work out in their adult years."

Kelsie J. Bayless, an 11-year-old from Grandview, Mo., seems anything but bored. She took a YMCA "Tweens on Weights" class that teaches children how to properly use weights and cardiovascular machines. But she mostly spends her time on tae kwon do, a home-school physical education class, swimming and running.

She, her three siblings and their mother work out at the YMCA about three or four times a week.

"There's a lot of people you can be with, and there are a lot of cool things to do," she said. "It makes me feel good when I work out."

Kelsie's parents, Wendi and Robert, struggle with their own weight and want their children to develop healthy habits. They admit they wouldn't go as often if their children weren't going.

"For them it's fun, for us it's more of a chore," Wendi Bayless said. "Taking them makes us have to go, too."

Despite the national trend, Robert Bayless noted that not every fitness club is kid-friendly, calling some "almost anti-family."

MacInnis, of the health club association, acknowledged that some people don't want children in their health clubs.

"As the infusion of family fitness continues, an adult will have to decide if it's going to bother him to have a 14-year-old working out beside him," she said. "You might have to ask, 'Will there be kids in my class? And if you don't want that, look elsewhere.'"

FRESHMAN PUNT RETURNER Danny Amendola returns a punt against TCU Saturday at Jones SBC Stadium. The Red Raiders defeated the Horned Frogs, 70-35.

Long road through the Big 12's best

"The challenge for me is to try and not ever have to do that again. It's kind of a tough deal, but you just prepare and keep going on about your business."

The University Daily

Texas Tech is one of only four Big 12 teams playing this weekend, only after Tech moved its bye week from this weekend to Oct. 16.

After Saturday's performance against TCU, Tech quarterback Sonny Cumbie is thankful for the switch.

"I really am glad," Cumbie said. "Especially coming off this past week with our offense, defense and special teams all coming together. Maybe we can take that and build on it."

The Red Raiders (2-1) will be hitting the road to start conference play as they travel to Lawrence, Kan., Saturday to face the 2-1 Kansas Jayhawks, and then to Norman, Okla., the following week to play No. 2 Oklahoma.

The next two weeks will be a reunion of sorts for Tech coach Mike Leach, as he faces his former co-workers Mark Mangino at Kansas and Bob Stoops at Oklahoma.

In 1999, Stoops' first season as the Sooners coach, Leach was his offensive coordinator and Mangino his assistant head coach and running game coordinator. After Leach left for Tech after the 1999 season, Mangino became the Sooners' offensive coordinator and helped lead them to a national championship in 2000.

"He's a good guy," Leach said of Mangino. "I enjoyed working with him and thought he did a good job, and has continued that at Kansas. We're not too similar in offensive philosophies. He's more of a run/play action guy, a little more of what you see at Kansas State since he worked under (K-State coach) Bill Snyder for years."

The way the schedule worked out for Tech resulted in the Raiders not having their second home game until Oct. 9 against Nebraska, something Leach said he must accept, but does not like.

"The challenge for me is to try and not ever have to do that again," Leach said of playing four of his first five conference games on the road. "It's kind of a tough deal, but you just prepare and keep going on about your business. You just hope your players are strong enough to avoid distractions, and the stronger mentality everyone has, the better they'll be able to avoid the distractions."

Tech has only lost to the Jayhawks once, but has never lost in Lawrence. The last meeting between the two teams in Lawrence saw the Raiders jump out to a large lead only to see Kansas rally and narrowly miss a victory. Tech won the game 45-39, and it left a memory in Cumbie's head.

"They really are a tough team," Cumbie said. "The last time we played there they played us real tough. The biggest thing you can do to get off on the right foot in conference play is win a football game, it doesn't matter if it's at home or on the road. The approach will be the same way we approached (TCU)."

Kansas is led statistically by quarterback Adam Barmann, who has averaged 234.4 yards passing per game and receiver Brandon Rideau, who's averaged 54.7 receiving yards per game along with three touchdowns. The Jayhawks also have the No. 10-ranked defense in the country.

Tech is ranked sixth in the country in total offense and No. 1 in passing offense behind Cumbie, who has averaged 453.3 yards per game through the air.

The biggest turnaround for Tech so far in 2004 has come on the defensive side of the ball. At one point after a 51-49 loss at Oklahoma State and a 62-31 loss at Missouri in 2003, the Tech defense was ranked last in the country in total defense.

So far this season, Tech's defense is ranked significantly better, at No. 43 nationally and No. 27 against the pass. After struggling last season, especially on the road, some Tech defenders believe they have something to prove in their first conference road game.

"I don't think any of us are pleased with our performance last year," sophomore linebacker Brock Stratton said. "We're more comfortable with the defense and we have more of an attitude."

Linebacker Fletcher Session said he believes Tech can play competitively with any team on its schedule.

"I'd say probably the first two quarters against OU I was nervous," he said. "I was about to throw up the whole game, and playing against Texas I was nervous as hell. Now I'm confident. I believe we can play with those people. They're no better than we are."

After Tech's matchup against the Jayhawks, the Raiders' brutal October schedule comes into full swing. After traveling to Norman, Tech will return home to face Nebraska, who Tech has never beaten in seven previous meetings.

The Raiders, after a bye week, will face No. 5 Texas in Lubbock before traveling to Kansas State. To close the season, Tech will travel to College Station, where they will attempt to defeat Texas A&M for the fourth consecutive time. The final game of the season will come on Thanksgiving Day weekend as the No. 25 Oklahoma State Cowboys return to Lubbock where they were defeated 49-24 in 2002.

Oklahoma looking for another title

By David Wiechmann/
The University Daily

Since Bob Stoops became the head coach at Oklahoma, winning has been all the Sooners seem to do. And after finishing last season with back-to-back losses, the Sooners are looking to avenge what many in Norman would consider an unsuccessful year without a Big 12 Conference Championship.

During the five-year Stoops era, the Sooners have won two conference titles, been to four BCS bowls, had 16 All-Americans, 35 All-Big 12 players, 12 national award winners and won one national title. It is no wonder the Sooners are again No. 2 in the polls and are favored to win the Big 12.

Oklahoma has quarterback Jason White returning to Norman with his Heisman Trophy after being awarded an extra year of eligibility due to injuries earlier in his career. Only one player has ever won back-to-back Heisman Trophies, Archie Griffin of Ohio State in 1974 and 1975. White will lead one of the more potent offenses in the nation in hopes of claiming the player of the year award again and taking his team for another shot at the national title.

The Sooners' offense was third in scoring last year and No. 19 in total offensive yards. Last season's squad also set a school record for most points in a season with 601. It was the second consecutive year the record was bested, after it had stood since 1971.

The Sooners claim one of the toughest defenses in the nation. Of the five major defensive statistics, OU has ranked in the top 25 in each of them for the last four years. The speed of OU's defense is common knowledge throughout the nation and is known to shut down opponents. Oklahoma currently has the No. 29 defense and is giving up 291 yards a game, the Sooners also have yet to let an opponent score more than 24 points this season, a feat the squad accomplished three times last season.

With an offense returning a Heisman winner and a defense ranked among the best in the nation, Oklahoma will be a team to watch in the Big 12 South. They will face their toughest challenge on Oct. 9 in the Red River Shootout against the Texas Longhorns in Dallas. OU has won the last four of these meetings, including a 65-13 win last year.

Oklahoma plays Texas Tech Oct. 2 in Norman, Okla., in its first Big 12 conference game.

OSU reloads with young Cowboys

By Bryan Wendell/The University Daily

Record-setting receiver Rashaun Woods has graduated to the NFL, but his two younger brothers have still been around to lead Oklahoma State into the top 25 polls.

The Cowboys are No. 25 in the nation. A strong ground attack and productive special teams have led the way to a 3-0 start.

OSU downed UCLA, Tulsa and Southern Methodist, winning each game by at least 11 points.

Last season, quarterback Josh Fields and running back Tatum Bell led the Cowboys offensively. Both propelled the team to hold off a comeback by Texas Tech in a 51-49 OSU win. Fields and Bell both joined Woods in departing the team.

Rashaun Woods' younger brothers are sophomore wide receiver D'Juan Woods and redshirt freshman quarterback Donovan Woods. Donovan Woods has started all three games this season and has passed for three touchdowns.

D'Juan Woods caught two of those touchdown passes and averages 10.5 yards receiving per game.

The passing attack overall is No. 116 in the nation out of 118 Division I teams and last in the Big 12. The real force behind the Cowboys' offense is on the ground, however.

Junior running back Vernard Morency ranks second in the nation and first in the conference in yards per game. Morency has rushed for an average of 187 yards during three games this season. As a team, OSU's rushing offense ranks fourth in the nation.

Special teams is an additional stronghold for the Cowboys, which lead the Big 12 in average punt return yards with 25.6 yards per game.

Senior cornerback Darrent Williams is a dangerous kick returner for the Cowboys. He has one punt returned for a touchdown and averages 27.7 yards each return attempt.

The Cowboys open their Big 12 schedule at home against Iowa State on Oct. 2. OSU travels to Lubbock to play Texas Tech on Nov. 27 in the final regular season game for both squads.

Baylor relies on punter

By Bryan Wendell/
The University Daily

The hopes for Baylor to receive national recognition rest squarely in the hands—or on the foot—of a sophomore special teams player.

The team is hailing Daniel Sepulveda, a punter for the Bears, as a candidate for the Ray Guy Award for top punter and an All-American hopeful. Last season, Sepulveda led the Big 12 conference in punt yards per game with 44.42.

That average also put him at third on the national ranking list last season. Through two games this season he has already found himself atop the national list with an average of 49.18 yards per punt.

The Bears will undoubtedly call on Sepulveda often if their offensive struggles from last season continue. This season Baylor finds itself No. 107 in rushing yards per game — one slot below Texas Tech.

Baylor's average of 19 points per game this season is the lowest in the conference by more than seven points.

The team also puts faith in Sepulveda's leadership skills, as he is one of three team captains and the only sophomore amongst two seniors.

The defense also is near the bottom as Baylor ranks No. 11 in the Big 12 and No. 83 nationwide for total yards allowed per game.

Linebacker Justin Crooks is a strong presence on the defense. He is the second-leading returning tackler for the Bears, with 72 tackles last season.

The Bears went 3-9 last season and 1-7 in Big 12 play. All three wins occurred in consecutive games including their only conference win against Colorado Oct. 4.

Calling the plays from the sideline is second-year coach Guy Morriss who comes to Baylor after two years coaching at Kentucky. He has a record of 13-24 in his career. So far this season, Baylor is 1-1 after losing the opener to the University of Alabama-Birmingham and then defeating Texas State.

The Bears play North Texas at home this weekend and open Big 12 play Oct. 2 at Texas. Texas Tech will host Baylor Nov. 6.

Young takes over for 'Horns

By Adam Boedeker/
The University Daily

Although the No. 5 Texas Longhorns play Rice Saturday and open Big 12 play against Baylor on Oct. 2, the focus for coach Mack Brown may be on the annual Red River Shootout against archrival Oklahoma, the second-ranked team in the nation.

Brown has only beaten Sooner coach Bob Stoops once in 1999, Stoops' first season at the helm. The two will meet once again on Oct. 9 in the Cotton Bowl in Dallas.

Entering this weekend's game against the Owls, the Longhorns possess the nation's top-ranked rushing offense, which averages 386 yards per game on the ground on the heels of senior running back Cedric Benson and sophomore quarterback Vince Young.

Benson has gained 1845 yards per game in Texas' first two games and is averaging 8.3 yards per carry.

Vince Young is entering his first full season as starter after taking over for Chance Mock last season. Young is averaging 151.5 yards through the air and 52.5 yards rushing.

At receiver, the Longhorns are worn thin from graduation after losing their top three receivers including Roy Williams, who was the first-round pick of the Detroit Lions. The top receiver this season is senior Tony Jeffery, who caught eight balls for 91 yards and a touchdown in 2003.

Texas' defense is ranked No. 34 nationally in total defense after shutting out North Texas and giving up 20 points to rival Arkansas. The defense is anchored by senior linebacker Derrick Johnson.

The Longhorns play the Baylor Bears in Austin in their conference opener next weekend. The Bears have not defeated Texas in Austin since 1991, and have lost the previous six meetings between the two teams.

The Longhorns will travel to Lubbock to face the Texas Tech Red Raiders Oct. 23.

Texas A&M finding results

By Adam Boedeker/The University Daily

After a 4-8 record in 2003, Texas A&M coach Dennis Franchione is likely looking for better results in his second season at the helm in College Station as he did at TCU and Alabama.

The Aggies (2-1) started off on a sour note, losing 41-21 at No. 14 Utah, but since have given up only six points after shutting out Wyoming and defeating Clemson 27-6.

A&M has been led by junior quarterback Reggie McNeal, who is the team's leading passer and rusher. McNeal has thrown for 686 yards and a touchdown while completing 53 percent of his pass attempts.

McNeal has run for 257 yards and three touchdowns, while averaging 6.3 yards per carry. Leading the Aggies' receiving attack is senior receiver Terrence Murphy, who has averaged 92 yards per game in two starts.

The defense will likely look to make a re-emergence after the team's struggles on both sides of the ball last season. The A&M defense is No. 25 in the country against the run, and is led by junior free safety Jaxson Appel. The defense has struggled against the pass however, ranking No. 91 in the nation, giving up 248 yards per contest through the air.

A&M's formidable run defense will get a test early in Big 12 play as the Aggies host Kansas State. The Wildcats will travel to Kyle Field to break in Big 12 play on Oct. 2. A&M has a bye week this weekend. The Aggies host Texas Tech in College Station Nov. 13.

Bufs recovering after sex scandal

By Adam Boedeker/The University Daily

After enduring a well-publicized sex scandal, the University of Colorado reinstated football coach Gary Barnett for the 2004 season, but lost the services of six players, who transferred to other schools.

Three of the players, cornerback Sammy Joseph, running back Brian Calhoun and defensive end Marcus Harris, were starters on 2003's 5-7 squad, and three reserve players left as well.

Although the Buffaloes lost Calhoun, they have a seasoned veteran in senior running back Bobby Purify. Purify received a medical redshirt last season after earning All-Big 12 Honorable Mention honors in 2002.

After wins against Colorado State, Washington State and North Texas, Purify has averaged 123.2 yards rushing with four touchdowns. Complementing Purify for the Buffaloes offense is junior quarterback Joel Klatt, who has thrown for 566 yards, three touchdowns and two interceptions in the three wins.

The Buffaloes have a bye week Saturday along with seven other Big 12 teams, but will travel to Columbia, Mo., on Oct. 2 to face the Tigers and quarterback Brad Smith.

The following week Colorado will return to Folsom Field for its Big 12 home opener against the No. 25 Oklahoma State Cowboys.

After another game against Iowa State, the Buffaloes travel to College Station to face Texas A&M at Kyle Field.

The following week the Buffaloes return home to face No. 5 Texas.

The Buffaloes then round out their 2004 schedule with three Big 12 North teams in Kansas, Kansas State at home and Nebraska.

Iowa State still no Big 12 win

By David Wiechmann/The University Daily

The Iowa State Cyclones are coming off a disappointing 2003 season, going 2-10 and not winning a single Big 12 Conference game. This year, the team is looking to turn things around and use home field advantage for games against Texas A&M, Kansas, Nebraska and Missouri. The Cyclones opened the season 2-1 with a 17-10 loss at Iowa.

In the preseason, it looked to be redshirt freshman Bret Meyer was going to be the one to take the snaps. With the offensive line that performed below its potential last season because of injuries, and the Cyclones have the No. 116 scoring offense in the nation.

It is still early in the season, and the Cyclones still have to face the teams that gave them fits all last year — the Big 12. Iowa State's woes with the Big 12 date back to November 2002. Iowa State has lost 10 consecutive Big 12 games. The October 30 game against Kansas could be the highlight of the Cyclones' year as this game will possibly determine who finishes last in the Big 12 North.

K-State defending Big 12 title

By David Wiechmann/The University Daily

The Kansas State Wildcats came into the 2004 season fresh off a Big 12 Conference championship and touting a Heisman Trophy candidate running back in Darren Sproles. Kansas State also entered the year with no ranked teams on its pre-conference schedule.

The talks of contending for a national title came to a screaming halt, however, when the Wildcats fell to unranked Fresno State in week two of the season in Manhattan. It was a loss that dropped K-State in the polls and silenced a lot of the Heisman talk. But the Wildcats are still eyeing possible back-to-back Big 12 championships.

Sproles is the No. 3 rusher in the nation with 550 yards after three games. K-State ranks No. 14 as a team in rushing yards per game with 252.7. The speed and elusiveness of Sproles is what makes the offense a threat, but do not forget that the Wildcats were one of only six teams last season to average more than 200 yards per game on the ground and through the air, so their offense is fairly balanced. The team returns six starters from that squad and most of the offensive line. One position left with questions is quarterback.

What also sets the Wildcats apart is their defense. Last year, K-State finished in the top six in total defense for a seventh straight year, and is the only defense to do so. The Wildcats have fallen from their usual prominence but still rank No. 47 overall. The team has sacrificed 26 points a game so far, 10 more points than last year's defense, and are giving up 334 yards a game. This could be a slow start for the Wildcats, and they may be able to return to their usual dominance of the gridiron before the season is over.

Snyder has taken the Wildcats to the top of college football after inheriting a program in shambles in 1989. He has the second most wins of any active coach in Division I-A, which is why the Wildcats are always considered among the favorites to win the Big 12 North. Snyder has also led the Wildcats to 12 consecutive bowl games.

K-State opens Big 12 conference action against Texas A&M in College Station Oct. 2. The Wildcats have a bye week this weekend. K-State will play Texas Tech Oct. 30 in Manhattan, Kan.

Smith's Heisman hopes shattered

By David Wiechmann/The University Daily

The Missouri Tigers entered 2004 at No. 14 in the nation with a lot of pressure on the shoulders of junior quarterback Brad Smith. Missouri was picked by many to contend for the Big 12 North crown, and Heisman Trophy whispers were turning into talks about Smith.

All the hype all but disappeared when the Tigers lost to Troy State in the second week of the season. Missouri responded with a 48-0 pounding of Ball State.

Now, Smith and the Tigers find themselves trying to rebuild the respect they had earned with their preseason ranking with a Big 12 schedule that includes Baylor on the road and home games against rival Kansas, Kansas State, Colorado and Oklahoma State.

The challenge for the Tigers this season lies in replacing its running back. The Tigers are averaging 192.7 yards per game on the ground, but many of those yards are claimed by Smith. Damien Nash has become the man in the backfield with 264 yards on the year and five touchdowns.

The Tigers' defense is No. 31 in the country, giving up more than 290 yards a game. The defense will receive its toughest test to date when the team heads to Austin to face No. 5 Texas on Oct. 16.

Kansas faces tough foes

By Bryan Wendell/The University Daily

Kansas may hope an intimidating schedule will give the Jayhawks the challenge they need to be a threat to their opponents.

Eight of 11 Jayhawk opponents scheduled this season participated in bowl games last season, making this one of the toughest schedules in the school's history. The team is 2-1 this season, beating Tulsa and Toledo.

The Jayhawks suffered their lone loss so far after erasing a 10-point fourth-quarter deficit only to fall to Northwestern University, 20-17.

In those three contests, the Kansas defense has allowed 12.3 points per game to rank second in the Big 12 in that category. Junior Nick Reid led the Jayhawk defense last season in tackles with 133.

Kansas comes in at No. 10 in the nation in total yards allowed per game, allowing a stingy 258.67 yards.

Sophomore John Randle has been handed the ball more times than any other running back this season.

Randle played both cornerback and running back last season for the Jayhawks, but this year, he is the team's leading rusher with almost 60 yards per game.

Under center is Adam Barmann, a sophomore who started three games last season. Barmann is No. 4 in the Big 12 conference in total offense and has thrown for seven touchdowns this season while giving up only two interceptions.

Kansas opens its Big 12 schedule Saturday when Texas Tech travels to Memorial Stadium in Lawrence, Kan.

'Huskers change offense to West Coast scheme

By Kyle Clark/The University Daily

Much of what was said about the Nebraska Cornhuskers before the 2004 season began was about change.

Three games into the season the story of Nebraska football may be what has not changed.

The 'Huskers rank No. 12 in the nation in rushing yards and are No. 6 in the nation in total defense in two categories that have been tradition strengths of Nebraska.

Nebraska is 2-1 this season with wins against Western Illinois and Pittsburgh and a loss to Southern Mississippi.

Although Nebraska has been able to maintain a strong rushing game offensively this season with 253 rushing yards per game, the team has attempted to diversify its offense with more passes. 'Husker head coach Bill Callahan, who led the Oakland Raiders to the Super Bowl in 2002, has called 32 pass plays per game this season, as opposed to last season when Nebraska passed 16 times per game.

Nebraska quarterback Joe Dailey has been slow developing in the new offense and has thrown seven touchdowns and eight interceptions.

The 'Huskers are led offensively by running backs Cory Ross and Tierre Green. Ross has 375 yards and Green has 207 yards and two touchdowns. Nebraska is paced in the receiving game by tight end Matt Herian, who has 17 catches for 195 yards and three touchdowns.

Defensively, Nebraska is the best team in the Big 12 Conference, giving up 239 yards per game. The Cornhuskers are No. 2 in the nation in rushing defense allowing 41 yards per game.

Nebraska is led defensively by linebacker Barrett Ruud, who has 28 tackles and twin brothers Josh and Daniel Bullocks. Last season free safety Josh Bullocks led the nation in interceptions with 10, but this season strong safety Daniel Bullocks has paced the 'Huskers with two picks returned for a total of 74 yards.

The Cornhuskers will begin Big 12 Conference play Oct. 2 against the Kansas Jayhawks in Lincoln, Neb. Nebraska does not play this weekend. The 'Huskers will travel to Lubbock to play Texas Tech Oct. 9.

Soccer team playing in-state rivals

By Bryan Wendell/
The University Daily

Newcomers to the top-ranked Texas A&M soccer recruiting class may seem impressive to the Red Raiders, but Texas Tech assistant coach Jamie Woods said the Aggies still must prove themselves.

"We're a much better team on paper than we were last year, and so is A&M," Woods said. "A&M had the top recruiting class in the nation but both teams have to prove it."

Tech will play the University of Texas and Texas A&M this weekend at home at R.P. Fuller Stadium.

Last season, the Red Raiders lost to A&M 8-0 and Texas 7-0. Those games were on the road, and Woods said each team is different this season.

Playing the teams back-to-back is no easy task, but coach Felix Oskam said it is something that happens every year. Texas and A&M are traveling partners, and Tech has played them in the same weekend every year since 1998.

However, this is the first time Tech has opened its Big 12 Conference schedule with the two intrastate rivals since 2001. Oskam said this situation is not a problem for his team.

"We're gonna have to play each other, no matter if it's early in the season or late in the season," he said.

Playing two strong teams is something Tech's young team is prepared for, the coaches said. Oskam said considering Tech's strong effort against Notre Dame he believes his team can get the job done.

"We have to feel confidence in our own abilities to go out and beat a ranked team at any given moment because it happens all the time. It happens every weekend; somebody is being knocked off," he said.

The team will be especially motivated, Oskam said, because UT and A&M — unlike Notre Dame — are conference adversaries.

"If they are a ranked team and they're in your conference, the motivation should come from, 'You know what? These are conference games, now something is riding on it,'" Oskam said. "We win basically four games we have a very good chance to go to the conference tournament, and it starts this weekend — at home."

History does not favor Tech, which has not beaten either team since 1999. Woods was a player for Tech on Oct. 8, 1999 when the Raiders beat Texas, and then two days later, downed

A&M. Both games were home shut-outs for Tech.

Woods, however, said she would not try to use that as motivation for her players.

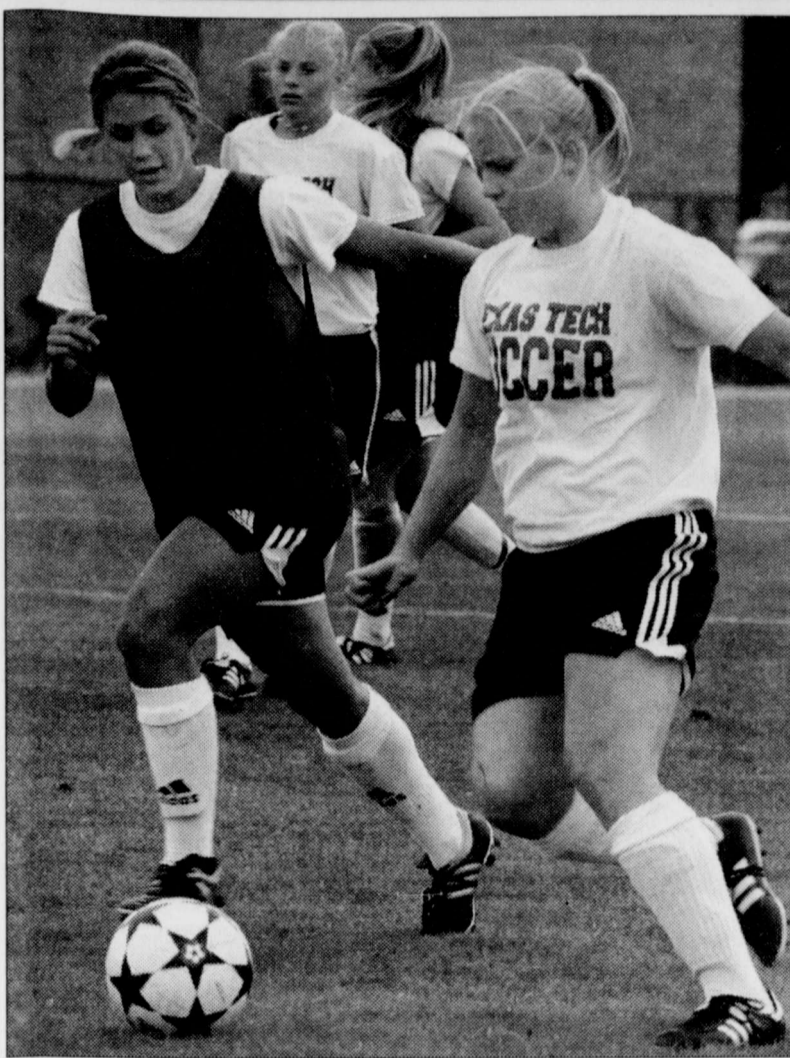

"I think it's a completely different team than when I was on it and obviously, the two teams coming in are much improved as well," she said. "I don't know if the message of, 'Back when I was playing this is what we did,' is as important as, 'This is what you guys can do.'"

Freshman midfielder Whitney Almand has the rare opportunity to play against friends from her club soccer days in each game this weekend.

"I'm really pumped to play them," she said. "I think it gives me more confidence because I've played with them so I know how they play. I kinda know the routine on how they play and what they do."

Senior defender Alley Seifert said the younger players are more knowledgeable of their two opponents this weekend than they have been against other teams from different regions.

"I think they've played with some of the girls that are on the team so they know their strengths and their weaknesses. ... With Notre Dame a lot of the girls were from the east and you don't know anything about them," she said.

The Longhorns (4-3, 0-1 Big 12 Sunday match against the Aggies Conference) will play Tech (3-5, 0-0) (5-3, 1-0).

Arrington out for two to four weeks

ASHBURN, Va. (AP) — Washington Redskins linebacker LaVar Arrington is expected to miss two to four weeks, including Monday night's game against the Dallas Cowboys, after a sudden flare-up forced him to have surgery on his right knee.

Arrington missed practice Thursday to fly to Birmingham, Ala., to see a team doctor, who repaired torn cartilage in the knee that has been bothering the three-time Pro Bowl linebacker since the opening-week victory against the Tampa Bay Buccaneers.

Arrington will be on crutches for at least a week.

"It's just one of those things that happens and you've got to take care of," coach Joe Gibbs said. "He's somebody that we think is going to play for a long time, so we want to take good care of him."

Raiders hoping to find themselves

By David Wiechmann/
The University Daily

Many Americans struggle with an identity crisis. But they all are not on the same volleyball team.

Texas Tech was swept by the No. 21 Jayhawks Wednesday in a game that the players said felt unusual. They are looking to be more like themselves Saturday when they visit the Iowa State Cyclones.

"It was not us out there on the court. We didn't play to our potential," said freshman outside hitter Amy Charlebois.

Charlebois led Tech with 10 kills during the match. She said Wednesday's match was in a way a wake up call for the Raiders (5-4, 1-2 Big 12 Conference). It caused the team to take a new approach to this weekend's match.

"I think our attitude has changed. I think we're ready to go out there and play our own game now," she said.

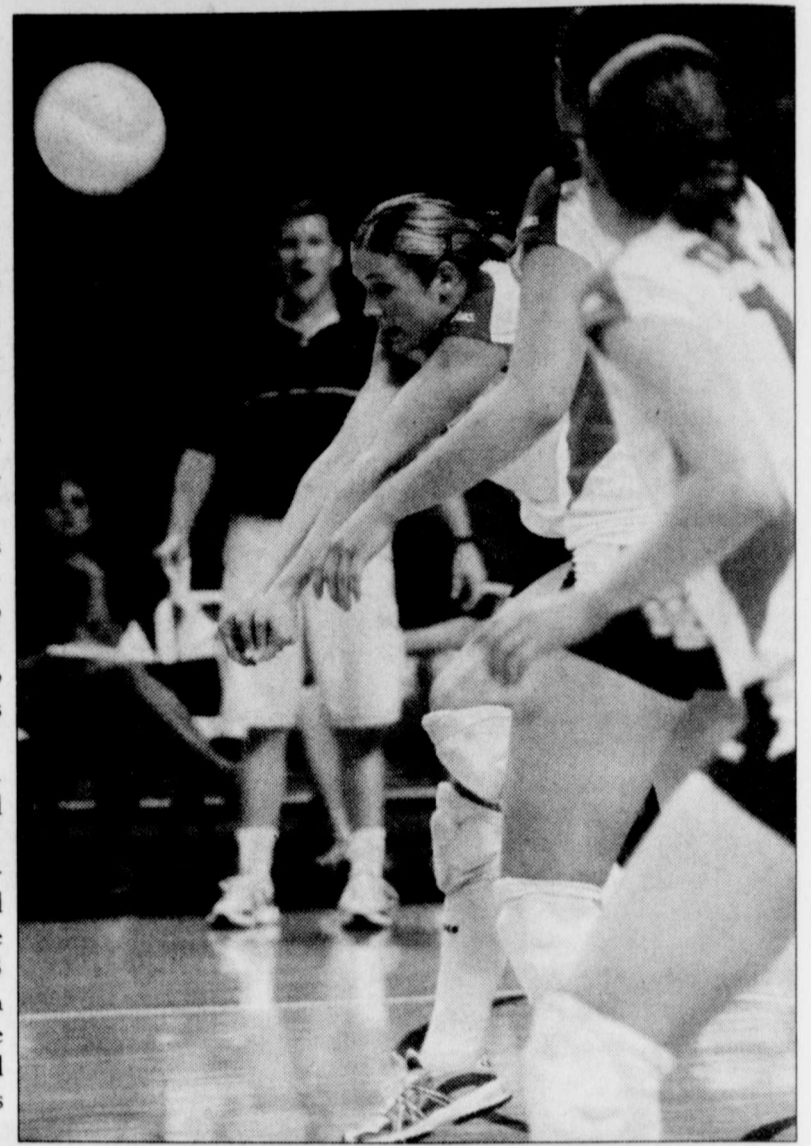

Playing their game will mean stopping an Iowa State team that has had difficulty getting wins in conference play as well. The Cyclones are 7-3 overall and are tied with Tech at 1-2 in conference competition. Sophomore middle blocker Nina Miller echoed Charlebois and said all the Raiders have to do is be themselves.

"We just have to go out there and play like we know how we can play," she said. "I don't know what was wrong. I don't think any of us know; we just weren't ourselves."

Because the Raiders were not playing as usual, they let themselves slip into a large deficit early in the match. Tech was not able to recover from it, and therein lies Tech's challenge for the next match.

"At the beginning we got down, and we'd come back, but it was never really close. They were always ahead," Miller said. "It's always important no matter where you are to jump out and get on top."

Traveling in the Big 12 is a grueling 11-week season, and winning on the road is where ground can be made up in the standings. Every year coaches emphasize the importance of protecting home court and stealing wins on the road. The Raiders failed in their first opportunity to do that, but are hoping to turn things around this weekend. Tech knows it will be a difficult task, however.

"You always want to go out there and win, but when you're not at home things are more difficult. You just have to go out there and play," Miller said. "It's tiring. We go out, fly for however long and play, and yeah, we're tired, but we need to go out and do what we're here to do no matter what conditions."

Getting their first road win in conference play will mean the Raiders have to counter the hostile crowd, which Charlebois said is drastically different than playing at home, but she has faith her team can do it and come back to Lubbock with a 2-2 Big 12 record if the Raiders can utilize their talent and overcome mental obstacles in the way.

"We have the skills. We have everything we need to win; we just need to put it all out there on the court when we need to," she said. "It's pretty much all mental. We just need to get that attitude and the mind set and we'll win."

Raider cross country squads hoping to continue improving at Minnesota meet

By David Wiechmann/
The University Daily

The Texas Tech cross country teams will run the gamut of a grueling race with a trip to Minneapolis, Minn., for the 19th annual Roy Griak Invite and the Mall of America.

The Raiders will face the daunting task of an 8-K race the men will run and the 6-K race the women will compete in with 32 other teams.

It will serve as a chance for the men's squad to continue to improve and show the strides it has made in the offseason after finishing last in the same meet last season.

"As a team, we've put in tons and tons of mileage and work to get ready for this," said Adam Lawless. "It's been four weeks since the season started, and we're looking forward to mixing it up."

The men are coming off a fifth-place finish last week at New Mexico, and Rob Kalescky said moving up the ranks at this meet and in the Big 12 Conference is the goal for the men's team this year.

"We came in dead last the year before and last year, we were ninth, so the improvement is good," he said.

Some of the improvement has come from the addition of two Kenyans to the men's team. Benson Cheserek and Haron Lagat both came to Tech from Nairobi to run for the Raiders and coach Burke Binning said he is excited to have them on his team.

Binning also is excited about his women's team that made the top 25 this week. It is a ranking senior Bridgett Tidwell said she likes having and looks forward to living up to.

"We're real excited about that," she said. "We're in a different place now because people are looking at us like we're good. We used to be the underdog and didn't really have any pressure, and I don't really feel any pressure."

The early ranking increases the Raiders' chances of reaching the national meet as 31 teams are taken. If Tech cannot reach the championship through qualifying in its region, perhaps the ranking can help get them there.

Making the top 30 rankings and being as high as 24 also shows the women's team has made improvements after finishing last season just out of the top 30. It also adds some confidence to the team that now has a target on its back instead of firing at one.

"I'm real excited because it's the highest we've been ranked since I've been here, and I think it shows we're doing a good job," Tidwell said. "And it makes us feel that we are good and go out and run good. I like being thought of as good because it makes me go out there and act confident."

Women's golf squad to host tournament

By David Wiechmann/
The University Daily

The Rawls Course will play host to its first NCAA event as the women's golf team welcomes 18 teams to the Jeannine McHaney Invitational this weekend. Play begins at 8 a.m. Friday through Sunday.

The tournament is named after McHaney, who was influential in the development and growth of women's athletics at Texas Tech. She coached the volleyball team from 1966-75, and she served as the first director of women's athletics when it was established in 1975. McHaney was the first woman inducted into the Texas Tech Athletic Hall of Honor.

The competition will be daunting, as nine of the teams rank in the top 50, including No. 1 Missouri. Two other ranked Big 12 Conference teams will play the course as No. 15 Oklahoma and No. 16 Iowa State will partake in the competition.

Friday's round will be organized as tee times beginning at 8 a.m. Saturday and Sunday will be a shotgun start at 8 a.m. The tournament is open to the public and admission is free. This will mark the first time the Raiders will host a tournament on their course.

Tech will later host the first stage of postseason play in the spring when the Rawls Course will host an NCAA regional. The McHaney Invitational and the regional are two of the events women's coach Stacey Totman has been looking forward to for a long time and hopes they will both be a success and make an impact on the visitors' impressions of the course.

"We're excited the Rawls Course gets to host two wonderful events this year," she said. "It's a great thing for our program and the university, and we're getting anxious. We want to make sure they all have a great time, and they will definitely have a great experience because the course is so fun to play."
