Health And Safety Tips

From The American Medical Association

Do you know how to be a good patient?

There's more to it than just wanting to be well. If you know how to be a good patient, you can receive even better health care, get more for your money, and make your doctor's job easier.

In a new pamphlet on the subject of "How to Be a Good Patient," the American Medical Association urges that it is important to choose a family physician before illness strikes. Meet him personally, have your medical history on file in his office and schedule periodic physical examinations. Then, should illness strike, you'll know where to turn.

There is a real advantage in going to the doctor's office, rather than insisting that he come to your home. Proper examination, to help the doctor arrive at a diagnosis, can be done much better in the office, where everything is at hand to make it thorough.

In phoning the doctor, when a house call is essential, be prepared to tell him briefly all the facts in the case, the symptoms of illness, temperature and other factors. It is impossible for the doctor to carry with him all the tools of modern medicine, but if he is told what to expect, he can bring along some of the equipment and medicines that might help in your case.

At home or in his office, tell your doctor the whole story. The uncommunicative patient merely makes it more difficult for his doctor to treat him. Have in mind the salient facts about past illnesses, operations, accidents, even when they are years in the past. Have your questions ready, too, and never hesitate to ask the doctor about anything that is puzzling you.

Most patients are embarrassed about discussing the fee when they first go to a doctor. The best thing for both the patient and the physician is to bring up the subject of fees on the first visit. No one should mind a frank discussion of charges.

The patient seeks the doctor's opinion about the state of his health, and he seeks advice on what to do about it. The time and money of both doctor and patient may be wasted if you don't follow the advice. If you decide to stop taking the prescribed pills after a day or two, or if you don't bother to have the prescription filled at all, or if you head for the golf course when the doctor ordered rest, you may be facing even more serious illness later on.

Party Said Recruiting Students In U. S. Jobs

The Washington Evening Star has said that college students in summer government jobs were being recruited for President Johnson's election campaign by a "Young Citizens for Johnson" group. The group denied anything "irregular or unethical."

The Star said that the Young Citizens for Johnson—cooperating with the Democratic National Committee—distributed literature among most of the 5,000 students in summer federal jobs.

The literature, the newspaper article said, invited those interested to attend the Democratic National Convention in Atlantic City, N. J., next month. The newspaper added:

"Those in charge of the drive acknowledge that the purpose is to enlist the students in active campaigning for President Johnson after the convention closes, as well as to get them to start Johnson for President groups on their campuses when they return to school in September."

The article by Star staff writer Joseph Young said a spokesman for the organization denied that the Hatch Act was involved because the students were told they would have to quit their jobs before the convention begins if they volunteer for convention duty.

"However," the article said, "it raises the question of civil service rules as well as ethics in contacting the youths who are serving in federal jobs that have been expressly authorized by the Civil Service Commission on the condition that there be no politics involved in their employment."

Sen. Pastore Selected As Democratic Keynote

Sen. John O. Pastore, passionate liberal orator from Rhode Island, was chosen as keynote speaker for the Democratic National Convention.

Tapped by President Johnson, Pastore, 57, was approved by arrangements committee for the convention opening August 24 in Atlantic City.

The selection was in line with Johnsonian strategy of trying to nail down the industrialized East as part of the drive to thwart Republican Sen. Barry Goldwater's bid for the presidency.

Of Italian descent, Pastore has carved himself a respected place in the Senate with intimate knowledge of legislation and his fiery willingness to take on all comers in debate.

Pastore has been a strong supporter of the Johnson program including the civil rights bill.

The committee formally ratified the selection of House Speaker John W. McCormack of Massachusetts as permanent chairman of the convention and Rep. Carl Albert of Oklahoma, House Democratic leader, as head of the Platform Committee.

The arrangements committee, headed by National Chairman John M. Bailey, has been hampered in its choice of a keynote because so many of the prospects have been mentioned as possible vice presidential candidates.

President Johnson is reported to have given no inkling of his choice to party organization or congressional leaders.

TWO FACES

Facade Of Gaiety Veils Real Harlem

Harlem best reveals its pulse through noisy 125th Street, a crosstown artery extending 12 blocks from the Hudson River to the triborough bridge.

Most of Harlem's rioting has flared and faded on this street. During racial strife, much of 125th Street has been closed by police.

In less troubled days, the street would strike the visitor as joyous and friendly by day, if somewhat mysterious and deserted by dark. It sheltered all manner of humanity—from the militant Black Muslims, the adherents of non-violence, the swinging night club denizens and street walkers and drug addicts, to ordinary citizens going about their business.

Every Saturday or Sunday afternoon you could hear a fierce harangue from an African nationalist on an open platform at the Seventh Avenue intersection of the street.

"The white man take everything you have and gives nothing in return. We belong to Africa."

Some would applaud, some ridicule, as is usually the case, on 125th Street.

A few blocks to the west on the same artery is the Apollo Theater, where Sammy Davis, Jr., and Eartha Kitt entertain "folks who can't make it downtown."

And at the nearby Club Baby Grand, dancers vibrate all night to rocking combo.

But around the corner from the Apollo and the Baby Grand are the "Fruits of Islam," judo-trained Black Muslims who greet "brothers" in Arabic with "As alaikum salaam" ("peace be unto you") and then talk about "cihad," a theoretical milestone of Islam that permits "just war."

Behind this facade of gaiety and occasional radicalism, many men and women you see around 125th Street are the products of these facts:

—Nearly 250,000 cramed in a 3½-square mile area.

—Only half of the children under 18 live with both parents, whose average income falls short of $3,500 a year. —Almost anybody, including teen-agers, can get an "easy fix" of heroin from hustlers who sell fast and for cash where dope traffic is almost congested.

The police precinct of the street, known as the 28th, reports that there are 85,000 persons, and 85 bars, in the area, with 30 to 40 per cent of arrests involving known dope addicts.

In the roaring 1920s the same street was the business and cultural apex of a more fashionable society.

George Schuyler, negro author and journalist who has lived in Harlem, recalls that before 1930 some restaurants in the area refused to serve negroes.

"Some theaters would permit negroes, but only in the balcony," Schuyler said. "We would go to the box office and sort of lean backward so that the cashier couldn't see us before he gave us a ticket for the orchestra."

"It worked sometimes." It is the pulse of Harlem. Nothing works permanently.

All Church Fellowship Honors Priddys

An all church fellowship honoring Mr. and Mrs. Bob Priddy was held Sunday night at the First Baptist Church, following the regular church service.

Priddy is music and education director of the local church, coming here one year ago from Calvary Baptist Church in Abilene.

Gifts were presented to the couple, and refreshments of punch and cookies were served during the social hour.

Approximately 150 attended the affair.

Ronnie Atchley of Denton, is visiting in the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Davis for several days.
