Precaution saves boating acciwell as bring the vacationer home safe. Terrible tragedies like the recent one in Port Bay are needless, yet, with the coming of summer and the influx of vacationists, unless this year differs from preceding ones, there are going to be number of people drowned.

Life insurance statisticians state that the three summer months account of about a half of the 6,500 annual accidental drownings in the United States.

The daily average rises during June, comes to a peak in July, and tapers off in August.

While many of these result from swimming, a lot more are due to the carelessness and crazy things people do. One greenhorn who won't listen, or a fool, can cause plenty of grief to innocent passengers in a small boat, and carelessness here can kill just as surely as a gun.

To combat this lack of knowledge on the part of some people, and foolishness on the part of others, the Coast Guard has compiled a simple set of rules for boating safety.
