Ross Leffler, Assistant Secretary of The Interior, Discusses Conservation Of Shrimp Crop Along Our Coasts

Ross Leffler, Assistant Secretary of the Interior, at a meeting of the Shrimp Association of the Americas held in Mexico City on June 19, discussed conservation of shrimp. Because his speech was so sensible, and because it brings out so many things that enter into such conservation that the average man rarely knows, the Pilot, as a service to the shrimp fishermen of the area, will run the text of his talk in installments. The first of these appears below.

"One of the pleasantest duties of my position as Assistant Secretary of the Interior for Fish and Wildlife is the requirement that I meet on occasion with government and industrial representatives of the fishing industries of our neighboring counties. In the present instance it is especially pleasing to me because my government and your government—and our fishing industry and your fishing industry—have mutual interests in the preservation and utilization of the important shrimp resources off the shores of our countries.

"No doubt you are aware that our catch of shrimp continues to return to the fishermen a greater dollar value than the landings of any other species of fish or shellfish. Both the value and volume of our shrimp catch have been so substantial in recent years that there has been an accompanying increase in the size of the fleet. This, of course, is an important reason for us to give the most careful attention to the resource upon which these vessels depend.

"Consequently, I am pleased to be able to report that our shrimp industry and its problems are being given special attention by the Bureaus under my jurisdiction.

"Reorganization of the U. S. Fish and Wildlife Service into a Bureau of Commercial Fisheries and a Bureau of Sport Fisheries and Wildlife has been substantially completed.

"The Bureau of Commercial Fisheries has, in addition, regionalized its operations so that there is now a Regional Director, based at St. Petersburg in Florida, for the area including the Gulf and South Atlantic States. All activities in this area come under his direct supervision.

"As of July 1 of this year the Regional Office is taking over the responsibility for all of the biological research programs. By Aug. 1 it will also be in charge of the remaining projects. These include the market news and statistical activities, market development, technological research and exploratory fishing.

"We are confident that regional coordination of programs will result in a much stronger approach to shrimp industry problems and more rapid solutions."

"SNIFFER" TRACTOR—Endurance tests are necessary for future space travelers but they're needlessly fatiguing for tractor test drivers. This electronically guided "sniffer tractor" is used at a Ford Motor Co. test site in Birmingham, Mich. The antenna at the front picks an electrical signal from a buried wire. The tractor follows this wire around the test track and jarring obstacle course.

TEXAS CHAMPIONS OF FREEDOM

Prince Carl of Solms-Braunfels

Guardian of Peace and Independence

In the heart of Texas today a beautiful little city owes its peaceful prosperity to a German prince who gave up a brilliant career to lead his humbler neighbors to their promised land, "the Free State of Texas."

But in 1842 in the young Republic of Texas there were difficulties. Land grants uncertain, maps inaccurate, transportation difficult, not all land suitable for colonization. Finally, after delays that would have disheartened a less valiant and patient idealist, Prince Carl started with his little band for a tract in the Colorado valley. The journey was never completed.

On the way, these freedom-seeking Germans camped at the Great Comal Spring, on the Comal River, Good Friday, March 21, 1845. Here they stayed.

Texas Division, United States Brewers Foundation, 206 VFW Building, Austin, Texas

This was home, waiting for the good life they would make. Prince Carl bought the Comal tract for them, and their settlement... still a stronghold of Germanic industry... was named in honor of his estate in the Fatherland... New Braunfels.

Today Texans still demand and get their right to choose the way they want to live. In this vigorous and freedom-minded homeland... "Beer Belongs" and this is why the United States Brewers Foundation works constantly, in conjunction with brewers, wholesalers and retailers to assure the sale of beer and ale under pleasant, orderly conditions. Believing that strict law enforcement serves the best interests of Texans, the Foundation stresses close cooperation with the Armed Forces, law enforcement and governing officials in its continuing Self-Regulation program.

MARINE NEWS

The Union Oil Company of California has asked permission from the U. S. Engineers to operate on State Tract 65, in San Antonio Bay, at a location approximately five miles southwest of Seadrift. The oil company has requested a permit to authorize oil well structures at the above location, which is 3,000 feet east from the west line and 660 feet north from the south line of the tract. The work at the well site would consist of driving six three-pile dolphins and four single piles, placing a shell mat, sinking a drilling barge, erecting a derrick having a top elevation of 156 feet above mean low water thereon, and constructing a protective structure. A basin 120 by 300 feet and an entrance channel 60 feet wide connecting with an existing channel would be dredged to a depth of seven feet at mean low water. The channel and basin would have a total length of 400 feet. The dredged material would be placed in the bay adjacent to the basin.

Local Teachers Taught Burmese And Thailanders

Carl D. Snyder left Hallettsville six years ago, headed for Burma and Thailand to teach vocational agriculture as part of the United States Foreign Aid program.

"We landed at Rangoon, Burma, just after that country had declared its independence from Great Britain, and as it wasn't ready for such freedom, we saw a lot of odd things. The people in Rangoon mistook liberty for license, with the result that they tried to liberate a lot of things that didn't belong to them, despite the efforts of local police.

"Mrs. Snyder and the children and I went on to my post in the South Shan States—Taungyi, it was called—and although there were a doctor and his wife and a sanitary engineer assigned to the same post, they weren't there when we arrived."

Snyder says that he had little time to do anything but work in the four years that he spent in the Far East.

"From the first day I arrived when my conference with Burmese officials lasted far into the night, until the last day before I left there was no let up, and there was so much work that it went on day and night, almost. I did get home on Fridays on normal weeks, but sometimes I would be away for two or three weeks at a time."

"I worked with the head of the Shan States Agriculture Department, and there was a lot to do. They followed the English system with experimental and demonstration farms set up here and there, and it took us some time to get going, and to reach the people not only in the south, but in the north Shan states and the eastern.

"When the Japanese invaded Burma during World War II, one of the first things they did was impound or destroy all the seed that farmers had, making the agriculturists absolutely dependent upon the invaders. Consequently one of the first things we had to do was help the Burmese people to build up their seed stock, and to help introduce food plants that would help them to feed themselves. And we helped them plant fruit trees, also, where they needed them. In some places the Japs had completely destroyed their orchards."

When officials of the Burmese government found out that Snyder came from a cotton growing country, they sought his help on the Burmese plain, to show better ways to grow cotton and to control its diseases and pests. And from cotton he also branched out to sugar cane culture and pest control.

In the Shan States, Snyder said, rice was the staple crop; farther south it was cotton and cane, and in Padaung province he was called upon to give advice on milk production. Dairymen there were milking a southeast Asian breed of Brahmans that gave about a cupful of milk apiece, he said, while the more advanced ones had Red Sindhis, a milk breed from India that has been used in this country as a cross with Jerseys to produce a good hot country dairy cow.

The Burmese were also trying Jerseys, Brown Swiss and Holsteins in the northern part of their country, to see if they could breed up the dairy herds there and they were using Berkshire hogs from Australia to cross with native swine.

Padaung also produced another strange beast, many of which have been seen by people of this country in Barnum and Bailey's Circus—aboriginal women whose necks were wrapped in wire extending them far above normal limits, and holding them almost immovably in what must have been a most uncomfortable position.

After two years in Burma, Snyder was moved to Thailand to start a national agricultural extension system, but one of his proudest possessions is a letter from U (Mr.) Kya Bu, Cambridge-educated Principal Agricultural Officer of the Shan States, with whom Snyder had worked closely during most of his Burmese stay.

After the usual salutations, the letter goes on to say:

"We hope your sojourn in our country and Thailand will treasure in your heart of hearts good memories. We on our part treasure the memories of the pleasant time we had with you and your family and we are only sorry that your stay was so short. At any rate, whenever I visit Myepyay village, those villagers still recollect the good advice and the pruning demonstrations you gave them on their pear plantations, and how they were thankful for the benefits you have contributed to them. This is real and not leg pulling."

"Here, I send you my photograph for the Burmese New Year, 1320 B.E., with my family joining me in you, your wife and all the kiddies the best of health, happiness and prosperity."

And enclosed is the photograph of a small gentleman in Burmese dress, U Kya Bu, himself.

Thailand was different from Burma, Snyder said.

"When I arrived, things were in a routine swing, and not going anywhere much. It was my job to set up an agricultural extension program that would help the people in Thailand.

"So I started with the ministers in Bangkok who were directly concerned, and then I visited Thailand and American technicians. The Thais didn't want a central agricultural system that would build up into a powerful bureau. They had about one agronomist, one veterinarian, and one this and one that, and the tendency was to consider these as all that were needed. Each one of them built up a staff and was a little king in his own right, and fought any other technicians in his own time. According to them, one of each was enough.

"On top of that, the country was divided under nine regional governors, each one of whom was supreme in his own region, and paid no attention to the Bangkok bureaucrats. These governors were responsible only to the king, and while they were moved around now and then, if they got to dipping too deep into the national pocket-book, they were very powerful."

Snyder worked with the ministers of the various departments and with responsible heads of the national agricultural college, the agricultural institutes, the education department, the experimental stations, the livestock department, farmers' cooperatives, the fisheries department and others, and, in time, was able to curb the power of the regional governors and to set up an extension service patterned somewhat after that in this country.

"I wanted to consolidate all the various efforts at agricultural education under one central head," he said, "and have them responsible to a minister of agriculture, with the chain of command running down through his deputies and so on, winding up with agricultural agents in the field to work with the farmers."

Snyder put in two years of hard work on this, and finally, before he left to return to this country, had the satisfaction of knowing that the Thai government had agreed to follow his recommendations.

"I finished setting up the service at 4 o'clock one afternoon," he said, "and we left at one o'clock the next morning, so we could get the children into better schools here. They needed to get into high school under American teachers qualified and equipped to teach them the laboratory sciences as well as just theory."

Bangkok, where Snyder had his headquarters while in Thailand, was rather modern in many ways, he said.

"The last year we were there, they had TV. The RCA people put up a fine station. Of course, no one could afford to buy a set among most of the native population, but they did have sets in store windows and there was always a crowd watching them. And lots of people had radios. It was odd to wake up in the morning and hear a set tuned in on a Thailand soap opera. The Thais are a grave, quiet, polite people, and the high-pitched chatter from the radio certainly sounded incongruous."

Home again from overseas, the Snyder family will enter school here this fall. Their son and youngest daughter will be students, Mr. and Mrs. Snyder will teach in the Aransas County Independent School system.

Shut-ins that have been able to attend the Church of Christ outdoor meetings this week included Mrs. Oscar Stelzig, Mrs. Owens and Gladys, and Mrs. Emma Yar-row, of Bayside.

Switzerland Grand, Says Miss Jarboe

Miss Marjory Jarboe and her sister, Maud, returned to this country on Aug. 19, aboard the Queen Mary, which docked in New York on that date, but the Pilot is still fortunate, as we have two or three more of their letters relating their experiences. In this one we give below, Marjory tells of their stay in Switzerland.

"I'm dying to tell you about the World's Fair," she says, "but first let me tell you all about Switzerland. We had a very pretty blue-eyed blond lady, Mrs. Muff, for a guide. All the Swiss have the prettiest smiles! Our guide was very enthusiastic and gay about everything. She belongs to a woman's Alpine Club and for recreation each weekend she and her husband drive up into the mountains, climb four hours to their cabin; rest, and then climb to the mountain peak! Quite a life. The Alpine Clubs build cabins all over the mountains for anyone to use for 93c a night. But the ones who rescue people are not Alpiners, but are special Mountain Guides. Dogs are only trained to dig people out of avalanches.

She told us many interesting facts about Switz, as they call the country. Farms are 5 to 10 acres in size. There are two cows per acre in the country. They have no mines or coal; water power is used for electricity. Fifty per cent of their food is imported. Water and electricity are exported. We drank Swiss water in Venice, Italy—thank goodness. With an area of 150,950 square miles, 40,000 square miles are barren, about 25% is timber and 25% farms; 72% speak German, 21% speak French, 6% speak Italian, and 1% speak Romansch. More than 400,000 of their workers are Italian; they work a 48-hour week and make about $6.00 a day. As apartments cost $50-$80 a month many of the women work. There are no beggars and no poor. Women cannot vote (and aren't upset about it), but pay taxes, as do men, for city, state, bicycle, and their own church of choice. They founded a democracy in 1291 and are the oldest continuous democracy. The Swiss have direct representation. The men meet together in each canton, once a year, to elect national councillors who choose a president (one year office). They haven't had a strike in their industries since 1918. Isn't that remarkable!

Their flag is the Red Cross in reserve—red field with white star. The first Red Cross action was in the Franco-Prussian War. You can tell they are the country of the Red Cross. The people are so industrious, cheerful, and kind. The chalets are just like the pictures, charming. The very best ones are made of oak; some are over 400 years old. The wood is not treated. Other chalets are made of fir and beechwood. An old custom is to have two chalets connected by a passageway. They are identical; one is large, one is small. The parents live in the small one, the married children in the large one.

The mountains seem like our Rockies. The roads—wow! Sometimes the front edge of the bus, beyond the wheel, was over empty space. We must have taken the hairpin turns at 40 m.p.h. Three flowers are the symbol of Switz: White Edelweiss which grow in chalk rocks on the mountainsides; blue Gentian which bloom in May on the slopes; and Alpine roses which form a red mantle over the Alps in June. The Rhone glacier was a beautiful blue-white frozen mass. Inside the 150-foot tunnel into the glacier the ice was clear and full of air bubbles. It didn't seem possible that the ice was centuries old. Patches of snow still hung on the peaks around us. Picnickers motor-cycled to the peaks. People were climbing everywhere and were eating their lunches on rocks surrounded by snow. Some even bought their lawn chairs! Mountains whose snow melts in the summer aren't Alps; they are just pre-Alps.

We went from Lucerne through the Gotthard Pass where we saw the 13th-century stone foot bridge passageway through the Alps. Next came the Rhone Glacier, 13 miles long, melts 60 ft. a year; then the highest car passage, Furka Pass, at 8,000 feet; then Grimsel Pass which was 7,000 feet in altitude. I expected it to be much higher. But in wintertime they say bones and stones freeze, —20 C°, and the goats eat tips of the fir trees. Can you imagine skiing over a forest?

We passed blueberries, apple and pear trees, beech and fir forests, granite cliffs, mountain waterfalls (hundreds just trickle) and hay fields. Hay is harvested by sickle. The mountains have wild goats, foxes, and deer, but no snakes. The last bear was killed in 1865. Many farmers use primitive air cables to reach their farms. In winter the children ski or cable down for school, as it is compulsory between 7 and 15 years of age. No private schools are recognized by the state for Swiss children. Each large city has its university.

In many places the cliffs drop sheer into the lakes. Roads are carved inside the rock, with windows cut through the rock to give a view and light.

If there were another war, I think the Swiss would come through in fine style. Each boy, when 20 years, must spend 17 weeks in military training and thereafter 3 weeks a year until 60 years old. Their guns and ammunition are kept at home. The army, consisting of every adult man between 20 and 60 years, can assemble in one-half day. Munitions are kept in the mountains. Entire hospitals and barracks are built inside the mountains. One year's food supply for the entire population of Switz is stored in cement shelters in a mountain. Their airfield hangars are sodded humps. They are thorough. Many electric plants are underground to escape the snow.
