Crop residue management is one of the most important of all Soil and Water Conservation practices in use today.

Its greatest value is perhaps in the Rolling Plains where rainfall is limited, both wind and water erosions are problems, and where soil-improving crops are not a part of normal farming operations.

However, the organic content of soils under any climate can be maintained or improved through the use of the crop residue practice. The organic litter in or on the surface of the soil serves as a protective coat to the soil against extreme temperature, and keeps the soil open for free movement of soil air and water.

Progress has been made in recent years in applying the practices; farm machinery has been improved, adapted, and even developed that will permit and encourage the widespread use of the practice.

Likewise, the use and management of residue-producing crops has been geared to fit into a crop residue management style of conservation farming. Small grain and forage sorghum are good examples of residue producing crops.

It is recognized that the primary benefits from crop residue management come from the physical effects of organic matter on the land as influenced by climate. The organic content of the top give inches of the soil is greater where residues are left on the surface as compared to residues completely turned under. It is a well known fact that the mineral and plant food content of soil will be improved with the addition and maintenance of organic content in the soil.

Mr. and Mrs. Eldon Wade of El Paso were visiting in Jayton last week end. They are moving from El Paso to Start City, Arkansas, soon we understand. That was home for the Wade family before moving to Jayton and also the home of Cody. Their daughters live there, only about 250 miles away. Plus, many many other relatives in the state. Could be they will really feel at home but we will be looking for visits out this way, don't forget.

More and more we hear of the killings that happen every day to hard working people trying to make a living for their family. And then some one too lazy to work, and too greedy for what other people have worked hard to make. I wonder, that if a gun law should be passed, if the one who shot Mr. Smith would have had the gun checked or would have even admitted that he had a gun. The killers will be one by some method. When they are caught they need to know that they are not going in for a rest cure, only to get going again. If they are mentally sick we still do not need them walking the streets to repeat the act.

Mrs. Edd Reaves was by the office Friday of this week, the first real visit we have had in some time.

Farmers are very busy in the fields, if not planting getting everything in shipshape order to begin. The rains have not been the gully washing rains that fill tanks for the stock but the grass is green and the ground seems wet enough to plant at least around this area but we have a feeling that a good rain would be smiled upon by the majority of folks.

"I'm never going to open another book again!" sighed Pete as he collapsed in my chair following his high school commencement.

But three months later, Pete had changed his tune and was ready for college.

Since then, he's had other graduations—from college, from medical school. Each time Pete has discovered that it isn't all over when you graduate. Something is just beginning.

Some people want to "graduate" from church at a certain age or time. They're just like Pete was when he left high school. They think they've outgrown the Church.

How empty Pete's life would be now if he had stopped at that first graduation. How empty your life would be without the Church.

Maybe it isn't all over for you! The church doors are always open.

As It Looks From Here

By Rep. Omar Burleson
Member of Congress, Texas

EVERY MORNING ALL OVER THE WORLD hundreds of millions of people start their day eating American cereals. The kids eating and drinking a certain juice will have enjoyed grow up to be chamaware of our shortcomings, which in a way is an asset. Where else can anyone be so openly critical of government? All news media at one time or another have differed strongly with the Administration in power, which proves we have more freedom of the press than any nation.

All over the world people know of the dissent in this country. Do they know that the right to dissent is unique to a free society?

We are the richest country in the world. The majority of our people enjoy the highest standard of living ever achieved. We have a Constitution and the forces of law that guarantee the freedom of the individual under it. Equality is the centerpiece of commitments under law—but it seems we have failed to place this product of our society in the market place.

Advertising is a great business in this country and is done by the most highly qualified experts. It sells products to billions of people which have a lot less going for them than the products of our system of governing ourselves.

Maybe we need research people, writers, producers and public relations, presently lacking.

The government itself cannot finance this type of campaign. In the first place there is no authority for it and in the second it would likely be viewed simply as propaganda.

There might, however, be utilized the highly skilled advertisers who have such a great influence over our markets.

Industry figures indicate that something like $20 Billion was spent in 1971 on the promotion of products. Suppose that business would be willing to set aside just a small percentage of their advertising outlay on TV, radio, newspapers, magazine and outdoor advertising to tell the story of

Uncle Zeke Sez

Ed Doolittle's daughter that works in the city wrote home last week about going to a wedding. She told her folks that the couple getting married wrote their own ceremony, and that it was beautiful. Ed told the fellers during the session at the country store Saturday night he can't wait for his girl to come home so he can get more details on the wedding.

The way things is going, Ed allowed, they probably wrote up somepun like a lease for a year or so. For shore, Ed went on, they wasn't much plighting of eternal troths like in the old days. Course, nobody knowed what that meant, except that they was agreeing to stay together thru thick and thin. That sticking together has gone out of style, allowed Ed.

Bug Hookum, that says he never knowed what happiness was until after he got married and it was to late, was agreed with Ed that marriage and everybody else has got what them economists call planned obsolescence. That means they are built to be replaced ever so often. What puts the stopper in the planned obsolescence jug, allowed Bug, was the piece he saw where the Japs has come up with a 400 car that you drive a year and throw away. The junks from this plan would do for the country what planned obsolescence in marriage is doing fer the family, was Bug's words.

Keeping up with changes in the way folks live in this country is like the schoolteacher said when she was ask about her class, Clem Webster said. She said teaching was like trying to keep 35 corks underwater at the same time. Ever time you look at somepun, declared Clem, another angle pops up in it. He had saw where this woman that was getting a divorce said that ain't what it was. She said she and her husband had jst decided not to renew their contract.

Actual, put in Zeke Grubb, we are coming around i, seeing that we can't keep this piece where "cosmetic surgery" is as big as recycling. This is where doctors tighten up skin, build up sagging places and in general try to overhaul the cover on the carcass. Zeke said he wasn't in favor of overhauls jst fer looks, but if it made a person feel better about his hole outlook, more power to it.

Personal, Mister Editor, i don't want to be young skin deep and old all the way to the bone.

Letter to Editor

All my life I have been interested in the study of cotton. I was practically raised in a cotton field. Cotton was my source of revenue for years. Long ago I worked for a short time in the Old Post Cotton Mill. I helped to process the raw cotton to the finished product. Cotton has for many years has been the crop throughout the South land and probably will be cultivated on South Texas, and on the Texas plains for years to come. In 1950 with my children, we visited the Thomas E. Edison Institute at Detroit, Michigan. There is a large shed that covers an acre or more of ground. It shows the evolution of steam locomotives from the very beginning to the great locomotives of today. It is a wonderful place. The music of the old steam whistle is no more and the romance of railwaching is forever gone. The modern diesels have seen to that, every mode of transportation was shown from Pharaohs Chariot to the modern automobile this is a wonderful place. We went through all the lanes to the exit on the opposite side of the building and saw two bales of Southern cotton. People who had never seen a bale of cotton were gazing at the cotton. Incidentally I told my daughter that there was one thing there that looked familiar to me and it made me think of home.

In the early years of the present Century an institution was launched at Waco, called the cotton palace. It disintegrated many years ago. I had the pleasure of visiting the place in 1913. We entered the building and came to a miniature-cotton gin. The cotton was ginned and pressed into a bale of cotton exactly like a large bale but weighing but one pound, they made nice souvenirs, the loose cotton passed on to a spinning machine and was spun into thread it then entered a loom and was woven into cloth. It went through a dying process and was instantly dyed. Then jackets and overalls were cut out and a woman finished them on a machine. They were ready for sale. On this visit I saw another place of interest there was a huge Auditorium on the location it housed a large ball room and the elite of Dallas, Fort Worth and Waco held a dance such as I had never seen. The men were all dressed in black evening clothes. The ladies wore ball room dresses, that would have dragged the floor but far a strap that they held on their wrist, which held the train off the floor. This occasion was the first and only time, that I ever saw high society in action. The music was furnished by Ellery's band. At that time one of the leading bands of the nation. They played for all occasions and the music was lovely.

Furthermore, went on Zeke, what we can't recycle we can redecorate. He had read this piece where "cosmetic surgery" is as big as recycling. This is where doctors tighten up skin, build up sagging places and in general try to overhaul the cover on the carcass. Zeke said he wasn't in favor of overhauls jst fer looks, but if it made a person feel better about his hole outlook, more power to it.

Personal, Mister Editor, i don't want to be young skin deep and old all the way to the bone.

Yours truly,
Uncle Zeke

Did you know that Father's Day was started in honor of one particular father? His name was William Smart and the holiday began in Spokane, Washington.

How come there's a Mother Nature, but a Father Time? And why do patriots love their "mother" country, but their "father" land?

Ladle into waffle iron. Bake for 4 to 5 minutes. Yield: 4 servings.

Farmer Certification Is Key To Set-Aside Program Payments

Farmer certification is the essential step preceding set-aside payments to producers participating in the U. S. Department of Agriculture 1972 set-aside programs for corn, grain sorghum, barley, wheat, and cotton, according to Joe Favor, local farm program official.

He urged farmers who have questions about certification to call or come in to their county office of the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service.

"It's important that a farmer know exactly what he is certifying before he signs his name", said Joe Favor, Kent County ASCS Executive Director.

Final certification date this year is July 1, but certification may be made as soon as a farmer has his program crops planted and knows he is in compliance with the programs.

As soon as a producer certifies, the County ASCS Office begins processing the data for payment which will be made soon after July 1.
