In addition to the Soil and Water Conservation District's supply, interested persons may also obtain copies of the Survey from Burleson's Washington office. The published survey contains a map showing each kind of soil, and a text that describes each soil and explains its behavior when used for farming, ranching, or as a site for homes or other small buildings, and as material for building roads, earth dams, or other structures. Demand for this publication cannot be predicted accurately, but it is anticipated that it will be used for 25 years or more by landowners and managers, engineers, staffs of the Texas Agricultural Experiment Stations, and other State and Federal Agencies, as well as users of rural land concerned with agriculture and non-farm uses in community development.

Teacher Contracts On School Board Agenda

In agendas sent out Monday to members of the Jayton School board they were reminded that their pictures would be made at the Thursday night meeting. In other words they were told to "don't forget to wear coats and ties." Perhaps the most important matter to be discussed at the meeting will be the consideration of the contracts of the class room teachers for the coming year. Other items expected to be discussed are: Appointment of the board of equalization, adoption of the report of the textbook committee. There are expected to be discussions of revisions of the school board policies, teacher handbook, student handbook, and a guidance handbook. Supt. R. N. Pierce reports tax revenues are in excess of the budget which is a good item. In his monthly report Pierce is expected to discuss with the trustees school finances, taxes, sick leave, and the coming trustee

Something To Love

One reason we are currently seeing a return to the days of the thirties and forties in films and literature is that many find so little to love in today's life, in today's America.

The present television generation--those under thirty generally speaking--often hate the system, as they say, hate the government, hate patriotism, the armed services, policemen, the courts, the traditional American way of life, traditional moral concepts and mores. And, of course, there is much wrong with all.

But Americans in the old days loved their country, and respected, in general, its government; the word "duty" was still a fine word (Robert E. Lee called it the sublimest word in the English language); law enforcement personnel were not abused wholesale; certain moral standards were accepted by most of us; the courts were, again generally speaking, respected and obeyed and good manners were in evidence in all parts of the country.

Economically, times were hard. But America had a soul, its citizens were not so violently ill-mannered, lawless and divided--even though there were discriminations and injustices. In short, we were more like certain northern European countries today, where law and order are taken for granted, there is little crime, and national unity and pride are proud assets of the vast majority.

Today Americans badly need something to love, something to believe in, something to bring them together and heal the wounds administered by militants, revolutionaries, mixed-up professors, youngsters and certain minority leaders in the sixties. Already, thankfully, the tide has turned. And the longing to rediscover the atmosphere and lifestyle of the thirties and of the war forties is a sure and welcome sign the nation is coming back to its senses.

Puffers Segregated

The Interstate Commerce Commission has ordered buses to segregate smokers, requiring them to move to the rear, as of March 22nd. The order, which affects all buses in interstate commerce, provides that eighty per cent of the seating be reserved for non-addicts.

This is a long-awaited reform, and should serve as a guide for the nation's airlines, most of which continue to largely disregard the rights and comfort of non-addicts.

On most U.S. airlines, only a small number of seats are reserved for nonsmokers; actually, this is somewhat meaningless because in the confined space of most airliners cigarette smoke doesn't always drift backward but often moves forward, to be inhaled by all.

Sucking burning tobacco, of course, should be totally banned in airlines except in enclosed smoking rooms; that's the only way the rights and comfort of non-addicts can be protected.

Prayer is a

The man who prays can hear the prayers of others, especially when he prays for those human needs which are common to all men.

But even when he prays for needs that are solely his own, he knows that those who care for him are joining their prayers with his.

And God's answers come back along the party line.

You're never quite sure the message was meant for you. You are tempted sometimes to think it was intended for someone else... until you realize that this answer which God has inspired in your heart does fit your prayer.

There are times when it's good for everybody on the party line to pick up the phone at once... and speak what they all feel... and listen to what they all need to hear.

That happens regularly on Sunday morning.

6 WAYS TO CONSERVE AND SAVE

ON WATER HEATERS

Normally the quantity of Hot water used in a household is about 1/4 to 1/3 of the total water usage. Here are some suggestions that can help you get the most out of your water heater.

1. With a little planning, you can arrange to wash only full loads of clothing in your washer and full loads of dishes in your dishwasher. Less than full loads consumes energy and wastes water needlessly.

2. To assure long life and efficiency, the water heater tank should have a small amount of water drained periodically. Once a month should be adequate. The purpose of draining water from the tank is to prevent sediment build-up in the tank bottom.

3. A water heater that's old, or too small for your family needs, can be wasteful because it's working too hard and using too much energy to keep up with your hot water demands.

4. It's amazing how much water a leaky faucet will drip in a month's time and if the leaking faucet is a hot water faucet, it will waste both energy and water needlessly. As an example, a faucet dripping 90 drops per minute, will waste 300 gallons per month.

5. The thermostat controlling the water temperature is pre-set at the factory to deliver hot water at 150°F. This setting has proven most satisfactory from the standpoint of operating cost and household needs.

6. The thermostat can be adjusted to provide warmer or cooler water temperatures. The thermostats are clearly marked for easy adjustment to increase or decrease the water temperature.

We All Know Texas Is A Big State

By Bill Hobby
AUSTIN--If you have traveled much in Texas, no one has to tell you it is a very big state. Because of its "wide open spaces" and generally good weather Texans have been quick to take advantage of air travel. At last count there were more than 1,200 airports, heliports, seaplane bases, and farm and ranch strips serving some 13,000 aircraft and 50,000 pilots in Texas. Thousands of Texans make their livings directly from the manufacture, sale, servicing of these aircraft. It is understandable, then, that these workers as well as the aircraft owners and pilots were extremely upset by initial reports that aviation gasoline supplies would be cut by as much as 50 per cent. Since then, the federal government has modified its policy to insure that general aviation would receive its proportionate share of the nation's fuel. The economic impact of the original, drastic cut would have been severe. Thousands would have been out of work. Ironically, such a crippling of general aviation in Texas probably would have resulted in no fuel savings. Most Texas communities are not served by commercial airlines. Severe curtailment of this state's general aviation fleet would have forced many Texans to drive their cars, which in many instances use more fuel than a small airplane.

Nation-wide, general aviation aircraft account for 55 per cent of all miles flown by civil airplanes, including airliners. General aviation transports a third of all passengers traveling between cities. Yet these airplanes use less than half of one per cent of the nation's fuel. Although statistics are not readily available for Texas, I suspect the figures would be even more impressive for our state. Because of the distances involved, air travel in Texas is especially efficient and convenient. Of course, this is not to say that general aviation should not make the same sacrifices as the rest of us. The most recent federal allocation reduces the fuel supply to general aviation by as much as 25 per cent. The general aviation community has been quick to respond to the national energy crisis. Through its publications, general aviation pilots have received many suggestions on how to conserve fuel and make their aircraft more efficient. Hopefully, by using prudent management and conservation techniques, general aviation will survive the energy crisis and remain a viable segment of our economy. GUESTS OF CHISUM

The Consumer Alert by John L. Hill Attorney General

AUSTIN--The best way to reduce consumer problems in the marketplace is to have a State full of knowledgeable, shrewd consumers. My office's Consumer Protection attorney tell me that people who are on guard against possible deception and who are determined to get the most for their shopping dollar are less likely to fall prey to unscrupulous business tactics. Consumer problems that are headed off before they develop could save Texas citizens money and grief and could save the State time and money by settling more cases before they reach the courtroom. Many cases now are settled before they reach the litigation stage by our Consumer Protection Division staff's efforts to improve communication between consumers and merchants. It has been said that consumer protection is essentially negative, while consumer education is essentially positive. I believe the two are intertwined, and both are needed to adequately safeguard the rights of consumers. With our tough Deceptive Trade Practices - Consumer Protection Act, the Attorney General's office now has the tools needed to fulfill our obligation as the chief protector of the consumer. District and county attorneys have responsibility under the act, too. And an even more important and innovative feature of the Act means private attorneys who represent individual consumers can collect triple damages for them plus attorney's fees and court costs. New trends are now developing in consumer education that we feel will complement the consumer's rights under the law. One example is the new Consumer Information Center set up in Fort Worth by several local consumer interest groups and our Consumer Protection Division. But adults are not the only ones interested in consumer information. School children of all ages are beginning to investigate the "how to's" of consumerism. Last session, the Texas Legislature voted to allow the Texas Education Agency to develop programs of study in consumer education. The TEA is authorized to begin classes as early as 1975. Even now, some math and home economics courses feature consumer-related material. In some states, even children at the pre-kindergarten age are learning how to shop wisely. In classes that deal with items of great interest to children (such as toys, cookies, and punch), young consumers learn that a small bag of cookies may cost them more per cookie than a larger bag. Older students may be figuring whether it's less expensive to buy or rent ski equipment for vacations or learning what to look for when purchasing a product or service. All of these efforts should result in a new generation of alert, informed consumers who are aware of their legal rights. We feel this will make the business climate in Texas better not only for the consumer, but for that large majority of businessmen who are honest and conscientious. For assistance with a consumer problem, call my Consumer Protection Division, your local county or district attorney, or your local Better Business Bureau.

As It Looks From Here By Rep. Omar Burleson Member of Congress, Texas

WASHINGTON, D. C.-- Hastily conceived legislation to meet the energy shortage proposes cures worse than the disease. Operating under an emotion, emanating from angered citizens who are inconvenienced and pay high prices at the gasoline pump, members of Congress are motivated to support measures which will further strangle the National effort to achieve energy self-sufficiency. This pressure caused the Congress to roll back crude oil prices as a part of the Emergency Energy bill. It was vetoed by the President and on second thought the U. S. Senate upheld the veto. There continue to be efforts to attach a similar provision to every piece of legislation now coming up which has to do with energy and especially oil and gas. Because oil prices have increased dramatically, about every member of Congress has an idea as to what may be done to bring prices down a lot fewer ideas as to how to get production up, resulting in lower prices. The law of supply and demand still holds and this is one which cannot be repealed. The effort at trying to control prices of crude oil and gas only reaches that which is domestically produced. It is these--mainly the independents--who must be looked to for increased exploration and new discoveries. The effort at paying tremendous prices to the foreign oil producing nations and not the domestic producers who already have a ceiling on the price of their crude oil except that defined as new production. The ways and means committee of the House of Representatives is now in the process of finding a formula for levying a "windfall profits" tax. When the hearings started the presumption was that we were looking for ways to encourage more drilling and greater production in this Country. These considerations have now reached the point that the emphasis is on reducing incentives and putting a greater tax bite on the independents for more Federal revenue. Again, this is the result of the complaints of fuel users, shortages and higher prices which overall comes from the high cost of foreign produced oil which has been encouraged by Government policy over the last decade and a half. To sum up, "OIL" is just a bad word here in Washington. Since oil is produced in any quantity in only seven or eight States, and since the Membership of the Congress is mostly from the big cities, the whole industry is becoming the whipping boy and analytical reasoning goes out the window.
