TRICARE to improve military health system

Better access to care, affordable and high-quality care, and more health care choices are the major benefits of the Defense Department's new TRICARE program, according to Reese and senior Air Force medical officials.

"The implementation of TRICARE will improve the health care services for all Reese beneficiaries," said Col. Monica Figun, 64th Medical Group commander.

Senior Air Force medical officials are also enthusiastic about TRICARE.

The Air Force surgeon general hailed the program as "the most important change in military health care I've seen in 30 years."

"TRICARE will control costs, improve access and sustain the quality of care we now enjoy in our military health care system," said Lt. Gen. (Dr.) Edgar R. Anderson Jr.

The program will be phased in by regions, starting in March with region 11 — Oregon and Washington. All 12 regions covering the continental United States and Hawaii will have the program by May 1997.

Colonel Figun, who recently attended a TRICARE conference, said Reese, which is in Region 6, expects to fully implement TRICARE by November 1995.

Colonel Figun noted that TRICARE will address the biggest challenge facing the Air Force health care system today: ensuring that beneficiaries have access to quality care.

According to the Air Force surgeon general, although there are fewer active-duty members because of the draw-down, additional appointments have not opened up because the number of people eligible for care has not declined significantly. "Many people simply switched status from active-duty to retired," he said.

Under TRICARE, contract medical care providers will also fill the void for people who no longer have access to military facilities because of base closure and realignment action.

"Once TRICARE is fully implemented, those who enroll under the TRICARE Prime option will be guaranteed access to the system," General Anderson said.

TRICARE, which covers all medical care, will offer three health care options: TRICARE Prime, TRICARE Extra, and TRICARE Standard, explained Colonel Figun.

TRICARE Prime is similar to a health maintenance organization that allows beneficiaries to receive care at a military facility or from an approved network of civilian providers when care is not available at a military facility. TRICARE Extra will offer a five percent discount on

Black History Month observance reflects on 1895

"Reflections of 1895: Frederick Douglass, Booker T. Washington, and W.E.B. DuBois," has been established as the National Black History Month theme for 1995 -- a theme appropriate for the contributions and struggles of these men and to a race of people in this country.

This article briefly touches on the significant impact these black leaders of the 19th century had regarding human rights and equal opportunity and treatment. These men fought for civil rights and legislative change to better the conditions of not only black Americans, but Americans of all races.

Frederick Douglass

Frederick Douglass was born Feb. 14, 1817. His mother was a slave and his father a white man. A slave himself, Douglass escaped to Massachusetts where he found abolitionists who opposed the institution of slavery. These men were powerful men who were willing to put their prestige, power and wealth behind the movement to end the institution of slavery.

Douglass was embraced by the movement and in 1841, he became a spokesman for the Massachusetts Anti-Slavery Society. Douglass was viewed as an "Apostle of Freedom" and chose to emphasize how slavery undermined family feeling among slaves. Douglass pursued his program of abolition, racial justice and women's rights through the strategy of agitation and spoke on the lecture circuit in the U. S. and in England. Because he was a fugitive as an escaped slave, Douglass left the U.S. in 1846 and lived in England until 1847 when several of his English friends purchased his freedom for approximately 700 dollars.

Douglass attacked the social ills of his day through the power of oratory and journalism, coalitions with the rich and powerful, political organizations and government service. He participated in one of the first national conventions of colored citizens and advocated a strategy of service to his country. He helped recruit the members of the 54th and 55th Massachusetts Regiments during the Civil War and accepted many political appointments in his efforts to better the position of the black American.

Booker T. Washington

Booker T. Washington was born April 5, 1856. The son of a slave and a white father, he was the last major black leader to be born in slavery. He spent his boyhood working in a salt furnace and coal mine while attending school. After completing the black vocational school at the Hampton Institute, Washington taught school and eventually established the Normal and Industrial Institute for Negroes, which soon became known as the Tuskegee Institute.

Washington became known as the "Apostle of Good Will" because of his stressing of industrial education and gradual adjustment rather than political and civil rights, according to Kelly Miller, author of the article, "Washington's Policy in Booker T. Washington and His Critics (the Problem of Negro Leadership)."

Washington came upon the stage at the time when the policies which Douglass embodied seemed to fail. Reconstruction measures had proved abortive. Such was the social condition in 1895 that confronted Washington, who at one time was the only person in the movement speaking out for Negro advancement. According to Miller, in his struggle to improve the lot of his people, Washington avoided controversial issues and moved, not along the line of least resistance, but of no resistance at all.

Many in the black community felt he was cowering to the white establishment because he preached self-improvement and self-attainment instead of civil rights; however, because of the anti-freedom movement of slaves at the time, his was the only true effective approach to the problem of disparity and equality.

W.E.B. DuBois

William Edward Burghadt DuBois, better known as W.E.B. DuBois, was born February 23, 1868 in Massachusetts. He was a social scientist, political activist, editor, educator and visionary. Before the age of 15, he became a correspondent of two black newspapers. He attended the all-black Fisk University on a scholarship and studied classical literature, German, Latin, Greek, philosophy, chemistry and physics. After completing his program at Fisk, he studied at Harvard University where he made important contacts to begin his fight for equality.

DuBois' philosophy was a mix of Douglass and Washington. As time went on, DuBois' philosophy changed as his perceptions of the needs of the black community changed. Initially, he agreed with Washington's strategy which involved seeking support of the powerful whites, and encouraged blacks not to protest against discrimination.

He believed blacks could obtain political leverage through industrial education, hard work and property accumulation.

He later became the chief leader of the opposition against Washington that polarized the black community into the conservative supporters of Washington and his radical critics.

This new position of DuBois was for blacks to "open the doors of opportunity by adopting tactics of militant protest and agitation."

His strategy became one of relentless attacks on color discrimination and he used many different means to get out his message. One of these was the Niagara Movement which he co-founded in the early 1900s, which pressed for full citizenship rights for blacks and public understanding of their contributions to America's stability and progress. In 1909, DuBois became one of the founders of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and served as the director until 1934.

Common goals

Frederick Douglass, Booker T. Washington, and W.E.B. DuBois may have differed in their philosophical and strategic approaches to the race problem in this country but not in focus—to achieve full rights of citizenship for their people.

In reflecting on 1895—the pivotal year that marked the death of Frederick Douglass and the beginning of an era that was dominated by the competing philosophies and strategies of Washington and DuBois, we bear witness in 1995 that the fire for full franchisement that Douglass, Washington, and DuBois fanned, burns hot and will not be extinguished. # General Fogleman to examine Total Force

by MSgt. Gary Pomeroy
Air Force News Service

WASHINGTON (AFNS) — Now that the Air Force has reached its "bottom-up review" force structure level, the service can better examine how Reserve and Guard units can support global taskings, said Gen. Ronald R. Fogleman, Air Force chief of staff.

Though he has no firm plans in mind yet, Fogleman intends to find — in the next couple of years — better ways to use the Total Force.

"I think everybody understands that I am a Total Force advocate," he said.

"In my previous capacity as commander of Air Mobility Command, I saw the value of making good use of the reserve components," the general said.

General Fogleman stressed, however, "Before I start making some big changes ... I want to have the opportunity to look at how this current force structure can support the taskings out there over the next two years."

He pointed to AMC operations — including KC-10s, KC-135s, C-5s and C-141s — as an example of how the Reserve and Guard already supplement Air Force's global taskings.

"Anybody who looks at what the United States is doing around the world knows that these are heavily tasked systems," General Fogleman said.

"They represent the United States of America in a vast number of countries every day, yet not one of these weapons systems last year exceeded 120 days of temporary duty."

There are several reasons for this, he said.

□ Roughly 25 percent of AMC's day-to-day missions are flown by guardsmen and reservists.

□ More than 60 percent of all strategic airlift pilots are in the Guard and Reserve.

□ About 50 percent of the tanker pilots are in the Guard and Reserve.

□ The Reserve and Guard

boast about 65 percent of the aerial port troops.

General Fogleman pointed to Reserve Associate Programs — which merge Reserve and active-duty units at active-duty bases throughout the United States — as providing "very high leverage in the strategic air mobility business."

Eight Reserve Associate units — three tanker and five air mobility — have already been established. By the end of January, the 931st Air Refueling Group at McConnell AFB, Kan., will become the ninth such unit to stand up.

General Fogleman said other weapons systems showed potential for utilizing support from reserve components.

For example, in 1994, he said, the average active-duty F-16 was TDY less than 40 days. "Maybe we have too many F-16s in the active force and not enough in the Guard and Reserve."

Additionally, troops assigned to active-duty HC-130 search and rescue and special operations aircraft spend a lot of time TDY, General Fogleman said, because "we have too many HC-130s in the Guard and Reserve."

The HC-130 situation exists because the Air Force sized its combat rescue for the Cold War peacetime operations tempo, he said.

"The idea was if we went to war, we would mobilize the Guard and Reserve and that combat rescue would come on active duty," General Fogleman said.

"But today with the kind of ops tempo we have (flying sorties in Northern and Southern Iraq and over Bosnia) ... we have a lot of combat rescue to put in theater right now. We were never set up to do that in peacetime."

General Fogleman said the key to the proper use of the reserve components is flexibility, because it's difficult for individual members to leave home for two months.

"You might be able to assign a unit a job for 60 days and then let that unit rotate their people in and out. You just have to be flexible to get the utilization out of them."

But the reserve components are not the only place to look for support, General Fogleman said. The active force can help itself with some asset adjustments.

Last year, for example, F-16s, F-15s and A-10s within U.S. Air Forces in Europe exceeded the 120-day TDY rate. The TDY rate for their counterparts in the Pacific was lower, he said.

"Maybe we'll deploy some of these crews out of the Pacific for a while. Then one of those squadrons from up at USAFE can be home."

Overall, General Fogleman plans to operate with this force structure for about a year or two, "so we can see if this is just a snapshot in time" or a long-term trend.

"If it is a long-term trend," he said, "we need to readjust some of these things," said General Fogleman.

Air Force revises OVA system

Changes reflect 'service above self' concept

RANDOLPH AFB, Texas (AFNS) — Secretary of the Air Force Sheila E. Widnall and Air Force Chief of Staff Gen. Ronald R. Fogleman recently announced changes to the Officer Volunteer Assignment System (OVAS).

The changes were recommended by a special study group headed by the Pacific Air Forces vice commander, Lt. Gen. John S. Fairfield. In announcing the changes, General Fogleman said he wanted to ensure the fundamental premise of "service above self" was visible in the officer assignment system.

"OVAS allowed members direct communication with the personnel system in deciding their next job while giving commanders an easy way to identify the officer qualifications they needed in their units," said the Air Force's deputy chief of staff for personnel, Lt. Gen. Billy Boles.

At the same time, however, some critical jobs in the Air Force went unfilled because no one volunteered for them. And, as General Fogleman noted, "we gain nothing for the Air Force or the reputation of Air Force officers in general when we leave a squadron operational billet or a joint staff billet vacant simply because no one volunteered."

The revised system, called the Officer Assignment System (OAS), continues to advertise job opportunities on the AFMPC Electronic Bulletin Board and selections continue to be made from interested and qualified officers who volunteer for jobs.

Gen Ronald R. Fogleman
Air Force Chief of Staff

"However, if there are no qualified volunteers, the most eligible of all qualified officers will be selected and assigned to the position," General Boles said.

The change may affect officer assignments with report-not-later-than dates beginning with the July and August timeframe.

The criteria for determining an officer's eligibility for selection is based on his or her time on station. Eligibility begins at the three-year time-on-station point or at the end of a controlled tour.

Notification will take place at the 27-month time-on-station point, or in the case of an Air Staff tour, at the 39-month point (or nine months prior to the end of a controlled tour).

This notification will provide officers months of planning and preparation before reaching their eligibility point for a non-volunteer assignment.

This doesn't mean automatic movement, but rather it's an alert to officers that it's time to start career counseling and planning with their commander, reviewing the EBB, and contacting their AFMPC or MAJCOM assignment officers.

The phase-in for this change begins in February and all officers eligible to move will be notified through the personnel system.

People who've completed their tours will be notified they are eligible for assignment selection as early as April, with July or August report dates. People with nine or less months left on their tours will be told they are eligible for new assignments at the end of their tours.

"Again, an 'alert' notice doesn't automatically mean a person will move," General Boles said.

"What it means is if nobody volunteers for a job, they will be one of many people considered to fill the position. The most eligible and qualified person will be selected."

In February, a tool will be added to the EBB showing the historical nonvolunteer selection criteria for each grade and Air Force specialty to help officers determine their individual vulnerability.

"Our goal is to make the assignment system more visible and responsive to the needs of the Air Force, of commanders, and of the individual," General Fogleman said. "We believe the new OAS puts these needs in a more proper perspective, while maintaining service as the touchstone of our profession."

F-15 commander briefs Armed Services Committee

WASHINGTON — America's armed forces could lose their combat readiness edge to the over extension of forces, lack of funding and high cost of unexpected peacekeeping operations.

This trend, if not corrected, will lead to serious future problems, a field commander told members of the Senate Armed Services Committee Jan. 19.

The bipartisan committee heard testimony on the condition of the armed forces and future trends.

"There is a serious readiness problem, and it does stem in part from insufficient funds," said the committee chairman, Republican Sen. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina.

To curb any erosion of readiness, service leaders have asked Congress to approve a supplemental funding bill of $2.6 billion to repay the unexpected contingency operations the military has recently participated in.

Though he admits facing tough money, equipment, maintenance, training, mission and people challenges, the F-15 squadron commander said the units remain mission ready.

"Despite our ongoing deployment to Turkey — with about a third of our people there at any one time — we found time to sustain a high level of general combat readiness and integrate new maintenance people and combat aircrews into the squadron," said Lt. Col. Mark G. Beesley.

Colonel Beesley commands the 494th Fighter Squadron, an F-15E Strike Eagle unit at RAF Lakenheath, England.

The only drawback to the flying unit's readiness rating is its lack of spare jet engines, Colonel Beesley said. "But that in no way affects the combat readiness of our squadron."

The current high operations tempo provides special problems for today's commanders.

Because the unit rotates to Incirlik AB, Turkey, where it patrols Iraq's northern skies in support of Operation Provide Comfort, Colonel Beesley said, as commander, he has never had the entire unit together.

"As long as you (Congress) continue to give us adequate facilities and the funding to train for our mission — a combination which produces a real sense of mission accomplishment — I and all my future successors will have no problem giving the American people a combat-ready squadron that believes in its mission and that is ready when needed," Colonel Beesley said.

TRICARE: Active-duty get 'Prime' coverage

DOD offers others three options

CHAMPUS co-payments to people who use the network of civilian providers. TRICARE Standard will feature the same benefits now available under CHAMPUS.

Here's how TRICARE Prime works:

□ Active-duty members are enrolled automatically, but family members must sign up for the program. Enrollment is free for both servicemembers and their family members.

□ Retirees, military survivors, and their family members pay an annual enrollment fee of $230 per person, or $460 per family.

□ There are no annual deductibles for anyone enrolled in the TRICARE Prime program.

□ Everyone enrolled in the TRICARE Prime program is guaranteed a medical appointment within a prescribed time frame, based on medical need, at either a military facility or with a network of civilian providers.

□ Patients will be assigned to primary care manager teams and will be seen by that team.

□ When follow-up or referral appointments are needed, the primary care team will make the arrangements, not the patient. Civilian providers also will fill out all claim forms for patients.

□ Out-patient care received in a military facility is free; however, active-duty members have priority, followed by their family members, retirees and retiree family members.

□ Inpatient care at a civilian hospi-

Capt. Michael Birgenheir, 64th Medical Group, examines SrA. Diedre Smith, 64th Mission Support Squadron, in the primary care clinic here. The 64th MDG expects to implement the new Department of Defense health care system called TRICARE by November of this year. Military health officials believe the system will improve patient services.

tal will cost retirees and their families only $11 per day — versus $323 per day plus 25 percent of the doctor's bill under CHAMPUS.

□ TRICARE Prime enrollees will have co-payments for care from civilian network providers. However, the co-payments will be significantly less than the other two TRICARE options when seeing a civilian provider. The families of E-4s and below will pay $6 per visit while other active-duty family members and retirees and their families will pay $12 per visit.

□ Generally, people who enroll in TRICARE Prime agree to stay in the program for a one-year period and can re-enroll each year. Medical officials are still working details such as enrollment locations and enrollment periods.

TRICARE Extra features the following benefits:

□ No enrollment fee. Active-duty family members can use a civilian network provider at any time and pay a reduced rate lower than the CHAMPUS cost shares.

□ Deductibles are the same rate as for CHAMPUS and TRICARE Standard — $50 per person or $150 per family of E-4s and below; $150 per person or $300 per family of other active-duty family members, retirees and their families.

□ Inpatient care at a civilian facility will cost active-duty families only $9.50 per day. Retirees and their family members will pay $250 per day, plus 20 percent of the doctor's bill.

TRICARE Standard benefits:

□ Beneficiaries pay an annual deductible of $50 per person or $150 per family of E-4s and below; $150 per person or $300 per family of other active-duty family members, retirees and their families.

□ Inpatient care at a civilian facility will cost active-duty families as little as $9.50 day; retirees and their families will pay $323 per day plus 25 percent of the CHAMPUS allowable costs.

□ After deductibles are met, outpatient care at a civilian facility will cost active-duty family members 20 percent of the CHAMPUS allowable costs; retirees and their family members pay 25 percent.

"It used to be if we couldn't see someone in a military facility or, if we had to refer the person to a civilian specialist, that person could use CHAMPUS or a supplemental insurance to pay medical costs. The patient also normally had to make all the arrangements. Under the TRICARE Prime program, we will set up referral appointments and handle all claim forms," said Capt. Anna Kramm, 64th MDG TRICARE director.

TRICARE Prime may not be the right program for everyone, note medical officials. Some people may already have a favorite civilian provider they want to continue with, or may not have access to a military facility because of base closures.

Captain Kramm stressed that active-duty military will be automatically enrolled in TRICARE Prime, but active duty family members, retirees and their families and military survivor families have a choice of one of the three TRICARE program options.

Captain Kramm said in-depth information about the TRICARE system will be published before the base begins the enrollment process.

"We expect to have a TRICARE handbook available within the next few months," she said. "We will also hold a series of TRICARE briefings to ensure everyone has a thorough understanding of the program."

Anyone with questions about TRICARE should contact Captain Kramm at 6487. (Adapted from AFNS)

SNOWBOUND

Grasping at the only chance for survival, an Air Force colonel makes the hardest decision of his life.

INCIRLIK AB, Turkey (AFNS)—Fearing that he and his son would not be found until the spring thaw, an Air Force officer made the hardest decision of his life. He left the boy in a frigid, makeshift shelter and embarked on a desperate search for help.

In interviews with Turkish and international media and the Air Force Broadcasting Service, Lt. Col. Michael Couillard described the nine-day ordeal he and his 10-year-old son, Matthew, endured after becoming lost in deteriorating weather at a ski resort 120 miles northwest of Ankara.

"Plain and simple, we got lost," Couillard said. About 2:30 p.m. on a skiing trip with a party of U.S. military and embassy personnel from Ankara, Couillard and Matthew went up two lifts to the summit of the Kartalkaya ski area. The weather was snowy and became increasingly foggy at the higher elevation.

"At the top it was hard to see. There was a sign at the top of the lift that indicated you could go in two different directions," said Couillard. "I chose one to the right and we headed down."

As they skied, the deteriorating conditions further reduced visibility. They lost the trail and became disoriented among trees. They climbed over one ridge and then another in search of a landmark.

"I figured if we skied down we'd find our hotel at the bottom of the mountain," Couillard said. "We kept going further down and didn't see anything that was right, and ended up on a logging road with a stream on our left side and a barbed-wire fence on the right side."

They continued skiing for two or three hours, but darkness and cold began to overtake the pair and Couillard decided to stop for the night. He marked the location along the road with their skis and poles. Heavy snowfall continued.

"The most suitable shelter turned out to be a tree along the right side of the road just over the barbed wire," he said. "I took a lot of branches from surrounding trees and piled them up on top. That was our roof. I made a floor out of other branches."

As the temperature continued to drop to zero degrees

tensely cold with a lot of snowfall," said Couillard. "Everything I'd done to mark our path had been covered by snow."

"We kept each other's feet warm and we spent a lot of time talking," he continued. "It's amazing how much effort

Fahrenheit, their attention turned to staying warm.

"I had to get Matthew out of what were very wet clothes by then. I gave him my jeans and put him inside my ski bib with me, and fortunately, my jacket was large enough for both of us. We bundled up together and slept that way."

They slept fitfully, being awakened by the cold. "During the night I kept looking down and saw down in the corner of our shelter a sort of glow," Couillard said. When he investigated in the morning he located a burrow beneath their tree shelter by a large rock.

"It was a small, two-man cave," Couillard said. "That's where we spent most of our time together."

Believing it best to stay in one place to be found, the two spent the next seven days sheltered from harsh weather in the burrow. Couillard added boughs from the trees for bedding.

"The first few days were in-goes into just staying alive. We spent a lot of our time changing clothes, changing positions, warming our extremities.

"I went out and got water when we needed to be hydrated. Fortunately, the stream was close enough I could walk down, although it was painful in ski boots. I did that from time to time," Couillard said. He broke one of Matthew's ski poles to make a sipping tube and used a ski boot for a water container to take water back to his son. Only when necessary did they eat snow. Two pieces of hard candy were about all they had to eat for nine days.

Couillard recalled some of the winter survival training lessons he'd learned as a cadet at the U.S. Air Force Academy. "When you have a real need there's certainly a lot of motivation to use those skills," he said.

The colonel said knowing people were looking for them helped to bolster their spirits.

"I think we had pretty high spirits for at least the first couple of days. We saw helicopters on four separate occasions, so it was encouraging to know at least someone was looking for us," Couillard said. "Only when we were found did I learn there was a massive ground search."

On one occasion, the helicopter flew close enough for Couillard to recognize an American flag on the fuselage. However, their position and distance from the main search area on the slopes, the trees and snowfall made spotting

"I felt that if I didn't leave, we'd be found in the spring thaw. My strength was about gone. If I didn't go for help then, it would be too late," Couillard said. "I went back down and told Matthew how to keep warm, gave him a pep talk and told him I was going to look for someone."

Couillard left Matthew with water and his outer ski jacket for warmth. Couillard estimated it took him an hour and a half to ski down to what turned out to be a deserted Turkish forestry camp.

"It was a great disappointment when there was no one there," Couillard said. "I couldn't really move. I had to crawl around on my knees. At that point, I just cried out to God for help."

Couillard did manage to enter three of the cabins, locating some dried macaroni and a blanket to replace his coat. The night soon fell. In the day that followed Couillard struggled to obtain water and searched for matches, finding only one which failed to ignite his kindling. A second night came as he drifted in and out of sleep. "I thought I kept hearing drums," Couillard said. "It was my own heart beating." He hoped and prayed for Matthew.

About 8 a.m. of the ninth day, Couillard went outside to gather some snow to melt for water. "It was quite a delight and surprise when a van pulled up," he said. "I started yelling in my best Turkish, 'Help!'"

In the van were Turkish woodcutters, who recognized Couillard from the extensive coverage given the search by the Turkish media. Couillard gave them directions to Matthew's location when he was taken to a forestry official's residence, and search authorities were contacted.

"They found Matthew quickly. It seemed like an eternity, but it was only about an hour," said Couillard. "I was very proud of him for the way he handled himself and hung in there a couple nights alone. It was a pretty scary experience. I was just thankful he did everything right and was in as good a shape as I left him in."

The pair were reunited and then transported to a hospital in Bolu, Turkey. Shortly thereafter they were flown via U.S. Army C-12 from Bolu to Incirlik AB.

Both suffered frostbite to their feet and toes; however, full recovery is expected.

64th CES bulldozes competition

After three blistering victories last week, the 64th Civil Engineer Squadron (4-0) was standing tall as the top team in intramural basketball.

The 64th CES began its slaughter of opponents Jan. 24 as it pounded the 64th Logistic Squadron-B, 68-23. The high-scoring offense was unselfish as three players scored in double figures. A1C Jeff Pettay led the scoring with 21 points. SrA. Lee Smith and SSgt. Joseph Walker contributed to the team with 16 and 15 points respectively.

The following night, the 35th Flying Training Squadron-B fell victim to 64th CES as its offense was grounded for the game. The 35th FTS-B was held to 10 points in the first half by the swarming defense of the 64th CES. Airman Pettay had 20 points to lead his team to a 67-19 rout. Sergeant Walker finished the game with 19 points and A1C Brad Voorhees added another 15 points.

The onslaught continued Jan. 26 as the 64th CES jumped out to an early 39-12 halftime lead over the 64th Operations Support Squadron. Capt. Eric Bass attempted to lead the 64th OSS in a comeback, scoring 13 points. But the 32 points by Sergeant Walker were too much as the 64th CES went on to an 80-39 victory.

In other games Jan. 25, the 54th FTS mounted a strong second-half comeback against the 64th Services Squadron to win its first game of the season, 41-34. Also, the 35th FTS-A disposed of Lockheed, 46-27.

The 64th LS-A continued its unbeaten season as it squeaked by the 64th SVS, 42-38, Jan. 25. In the following game, the Marines dropped a close game to the 64th Security Police Squadron-A, 69-58. In the final game of the night, Lockheed got its first victory by defeating the 64th LS-B, 62-51.

Lockheed was looking for its second straight win Jan. 26 as it took on the previously winless 64th SVS. After suffering through a few close-game losses, the 64th SVS moved out to a slim 18-15 halftime lead and pulled away in the second half to defeat Lockheed, 45-35. In the following game, the 52nd FTS won its first game as the Marines forfeited. And in the final game of the week, the 64th LS-A crushed the 54th FTS, 80-24.
