Owner shuts down nursing home

The future of Clarendon's nursing home is uncertain after the owner of the Community Care Center closed its doors last Tuesday, August 25, leaving 19 residents looking for a place to live and 40 people out of work.

Administrator Susan Hodges said 17 residents were relocated Tuesday and the last two were moved Wednesday. Attempts by the Enterprise to contact the owner were unsuccessful.

"I'm just devastated along with the employees and residents," Hodges said. "It has been extremely difficult on everyone."

The 60-bed home was purchased from the Donley County Hospital District by Royce Freeborn's Denton-based Community Care Management Services in 2008 for a sale price of $1,108,500. However, occupancy had declined recently, a problem Hodges blamed on a former administrator who lost the support of the community. Hodges had previously managed the home for Freeborn and was asked to return in June to try to turn things around.

"They fired him (the previous administrator) and brought me in, but it was too late," she said.

Hodges said the closure was the voluntary financial decision of Freeborn and that she got the call from him Tuesday telling her to shut it down that day.

"It was one of the most heartbreaking things I have ever had to do," she said and noted that some residents had been at the home for six to nine years and that about ten of the residents were people from Donley County.

Hodges commended the center's staff for making the residents' wellbeing their highest priority in the face of the closure.

"All the staff stayed on through all shifts even though they knew they weren't going to get paid," she said.

Hodges was uncertain what the future of the facility will be. She described the physical plant as being in "fair" condition and said it needs repainting and some cosmetic repairs.

Donley County Appraisal District Chief Appraiser Paula Lowrie said the nursing home's owner was not given a tax abatement on the facility when he purchased it. He did, however, apply for a tax abatement for some planned improvements or additions, but those never happened.

Lowrie said Freeborn was current on all property taxes associated with the nursing home and the more than eight acres of land associated with the facility. That property has a taxable value of $625,888, she said.

When the nursing home sold in 2008, Freeborn's company also purchased the hospital district's Community Services Building, which houses Dr. Richard See 'Home' on page 3.

USDA has trees for fall planting

Fall is the ideal time to plant a tree because trees are entering a dormant state after the spring and summer growing season.

Planting during this dormant state allows trees to recover more quickly from being moved around and to settle in before the next high growth phase in the spring and also the trees still have time to take root before the ground freezes for winter.

The Donley County Soil & Water Conservation District has trees available for your fall planting needs. For a complete list of trees available and to place an order, please call 806-874-3561, ext. 3. The office is located at 321 S. Sully in Clarendon.

CHS blood drive to be next Wednesday

Clarendon High School will a blood drive on September 9 from 10:00 a.m. - 4:00 p.m. in the Video Conference Room of the Clarendon ISD Administration Building.

Physician's Assistant Sarah Burcham and husband Daniel Burcham, new owners of Clarendon Family Medical Center. ENTERPRISE PHOTO

Local clinic under new management

When Sarah Burcham arrived in Clarendon in 2008 as the community's newest Physician's Assistant, she never imagined owning and operating the local clinic. And yet, that's exactly what happened.

Burcham and her husband, Daniel, took over the ownership and management of Clarendon Family Medical Center on July 1, but patients probably haven't noticed much difference.

"We're not looking to make a lot of changes," Sarah said. "The Howards had a great system in place, and we plan to continue that."

Talks of a change of ownership began not long after clinic founder, Dr. John Howard, was elected Donley County Judge last November, the Burchams said.

"We were at a point that we were thinking of moving closer to family," Daniel said. "We're nine hours away from her family and 16 hours away from mine."

But then, the Burchams say, Howard began talking to them about the possibility of owning the clinic. He was committed to being a full time judge but not wanting to totally give up medicine, his wife, clinic manager Lori Howard, had put in 17 years and was ready to retire. The timing was perfect.

"This was a turning point for us," Sarah said. "And we decided to make the decision."

Dr. Howard was happy to see the Burchams get the opportunity to own the clinic.

"I'm pleased to see local professionals will continue to operate the clinic with the same philosophy," Howard said. "I'm still at the clinic as a supervising physician for an excellent group of professionals. I'm not prepared to stop practicing medicine."

Howard said he is committed to his new role as county judge but said medicine is still his first love.

With Mrs. Howard staying on to advice in a transition period and Dr. Howard continuing his role as medical director and supervising physician, the Burchams have stepped into the roles of management.

Daniel's sister, Jami Vierig, moved from Atlanta, Georgia, to Clarendon to become the clinic's new business manager, bringing with her a 14-year-old son, Christian Wooten, and leaving a daughter in college back in Georgia.

The new owners also brought back a familiar face, Devah Pittman, a well-liked Physician's Assistant.

Sarah and Pittman, along with Misty Nobles, makes up the main caregivers at the clinic with Howard still seeing patients on Wednesdays. Daniel, with a degree in business, oversees that aspect of the clinic.

Daniel's main focus is maintaining the clinic's position in the community, providing 14 jobs, 10 of which are full time.

"The impact and the role we can play in the community makes it worth being away from our families," he said. "I really like helping keep jobs here. A big company wouldn't keep the same atmosphere, and we care about everyone in the community."

City aldermen split on delinquent tax bid

A split Clarendon City Council voted 2-1 to approve a bid on tax delinquent property during the regular city meeting last Thursday, August 27.

At issue is a 1999 Oakwood mobile home, owned by Nancy Shapiro and Bryan Leeper, located on the north side of the city. Back taxes on the trailer house total $24,236.95 for all local entities, including $5,157.31 for the city alone. With fines and fees, the total owed on the structure is $25,362.46.

The Donley Appraisal District solicited bids to settle the back taxes and has submitted the lone bid to local entities for their acceptance, with the city being the first to act.

The lone bid was for $100 and was from Leeper's son, Tim Leeper, prompting further questions from the city council, which ultimately approved the bid. Aldermen Sandy Skelton and John Lockhart voted in favor of accepting the bid. Alderman Doug Kidd voted in opposition. Aldermen Beverly Burrow and Larry Jeffers were absent.

Chief Appraiser Paula Lowrie said this week that the appraisal district has been trying to address the back taxes on the mobile home for a long time. The appraisal district's attorneys made several attempts over the years to collect taxes dating back to 2003 from Shapiro, but they were unsuccessful in serving her.

The home sits on land owned by Bryan Leeper, and Lowrie said it was only recently that his name was added to the mobile home. She said there is nothing wrong with Tim Leeper bidding on the property since he owes no back taxes.

Lowrie said the mobile home was put up in a sheriff's sale last December but received no bids, making it the property of the local taxing entities. She said Bryan Leeper now wants it off his land said the district has advertised unsuccessfully trying to sell the home.

Do not end birthright citizenship

By Alex Nowrasteh, Cato Institute

Many Republicans are falling over themselves to echo Donald Trump's call to end birthright citizenship. Experts will be debating the legality of this for some time — many say a constitutional amendment would be needed — but the real-world impact of birthright citizenship is more important than the legal nuances. Granting citizenship to those born here is an insurance policy for a broken immigration system: It encourages the children of illegal immigrants to assimilate.

Currently, there are roughly 4 million U.S.-born children of illegal immigrants and 17 million minor children of legal immigrants. Those already born wouldn't be affected by a repeal, but roughly 1 million babies are born every year to immigrants. As immigration attorney Margaret Stock wrote, "If proponents of changing the Fourteenth Amendment have their way, every baby born in America will now face a bureaucratic hurdle before he or she gets a birth certificate." That's a huge number of newborns to annually condemn to automatic illegal status — and doing so would substantially increase the number of illegal immigrants in the country.

That would be bad enough, but the bigger problems would emerge later, as this larger population of illegal immigrants would assimilate more slowly. Assimilation, or the politically correct term "integration," mostly occurs in the second and third generations. Denying citizenship to children of immigrants would deny them legal equality in the United States, stunting their ability to culturally and economically assimilate.

Imagine being born and growing up here and being constantly reminded that you are not a citizen and will likely never be one. That scenario is theoretical for Americans, but Koreans born in Japan have experienced just that and the results are ugly. The Korean minority, called zainichi, are a legal underclass discriminated against by the government. This causes deep resentment and a proneness to crime and political extremism. The zainichi grew even though Japan has virtually zero legal immigration. By contrast, Korean immigrants and their descendants have thrived in the United States where their U.S.-born children are citizens.

And successful assimilation isn't limited to Korean Americans. According to research from University of Washington professor Jacob Vigdor, immigrants and their children from all backgrounds are culturally, linguistically, and economically assimilating today at about the same rate that immigrants assimilated 100 years ago. Nobody today thinks the descendants of the Italian, Polish, or Russian immigrants of early last century failed to assimilate.

The negative effects of making citizenship much harder or impossible to attain go way back. Republican Rome tightened its citizenship rules after the Second Punic War ended in 202 BC. Romans turned their backs on a previous open-door policy that allowed noble families to immigrate and naturalize while also granting citizenship to loyal allies. The new immigration restrictions led to an uprising in cities pushing for Roman citizenship — one of the stranger civil wars in history. To quiet the unrest, Rome finally reinstated the older rules that had served it so well.

America doesn't face a revolt of allies demanding citizenship, but it does face millions of illegal immigrants, their U.S.-born children, and the challenge of assimilating them. There will always be some illegal immigrants in the United States, regardless of reform or levels of enforcement. Birthright citizenship is an insurance policy that guarantees their children will assimilate instead of simmer on the margins of society.

We are the midst of a failed immigration policy that has produced around 12 million illegal immigrants. Now is not the time to cancel birthright citizenship and its benefits.

Alex Nowrasteh is the immigration policy analyst at the Cato Institute's Center for Global Liberty and Prosperity.

Dreaming with the test of them

An old-timer who gives his age only as "90-ish" is forever reminding himself — and others in earshot — about his inhabiting the planet for quite a spell. And he's as "upbeat" as anyone I know. Despite his lengthy stretch of life, he says he "still dreams, but they're mostly re-runs."

Two other recent comments come to mind: "Show me a man with his head held high, and I'll show you one who's not used to his bifocals." And the other: "The days of 'plugging' watermelons are long since over." (Before you wonder if the guy is Uncle Mort, think again. This one lives on a spread next to my 103-year-old uncle down in the thicket.)...

These comments "hit home" — the "dream thing" dead center. Currently in the final stages of writing and editing a book about Mort, I have learned dreaming doesn't require absolute slumber. Dreams can pop up during moments in my lounge chair, when I'm "puttering" around the house or yard, as well as in the pantry "honey hole." That's where I've found my wife's stash of dark chocolate.

Maybe I was dreaming, too, when an email came with an attached likeness of my old uncle. Perusing it carefully, my wife and I nodded approvingly.

"I'm glad the eye glasses were added," Brenda said. "I'm sure Mort needs them, if only for reading." I agreed, then made a "thank you" call to Debbie Fraser, an Amarillo friend designing the book cover for Mostly Mort....

"I was able to make some changes, thanks to Photoshop," she said. Shucks, the only photo shops I knew about sell postcards in resort areas. She asked if we liked "the eyes and eyeglasses."

Eyes? We hadn't noticed the eyes. "The eyes are yours; I got them from a photo," Debbie said.

Though I don't think Brenda ever said anything about my eyes being "dreamy," I did overhear her telling friends my eye color a time or two in the past — I mean really distant past. That's the way it is when the 50th year of marriage is reached, as ours has. However, I still drive at night. And having "my eyes" may open a whole new world for Mort....

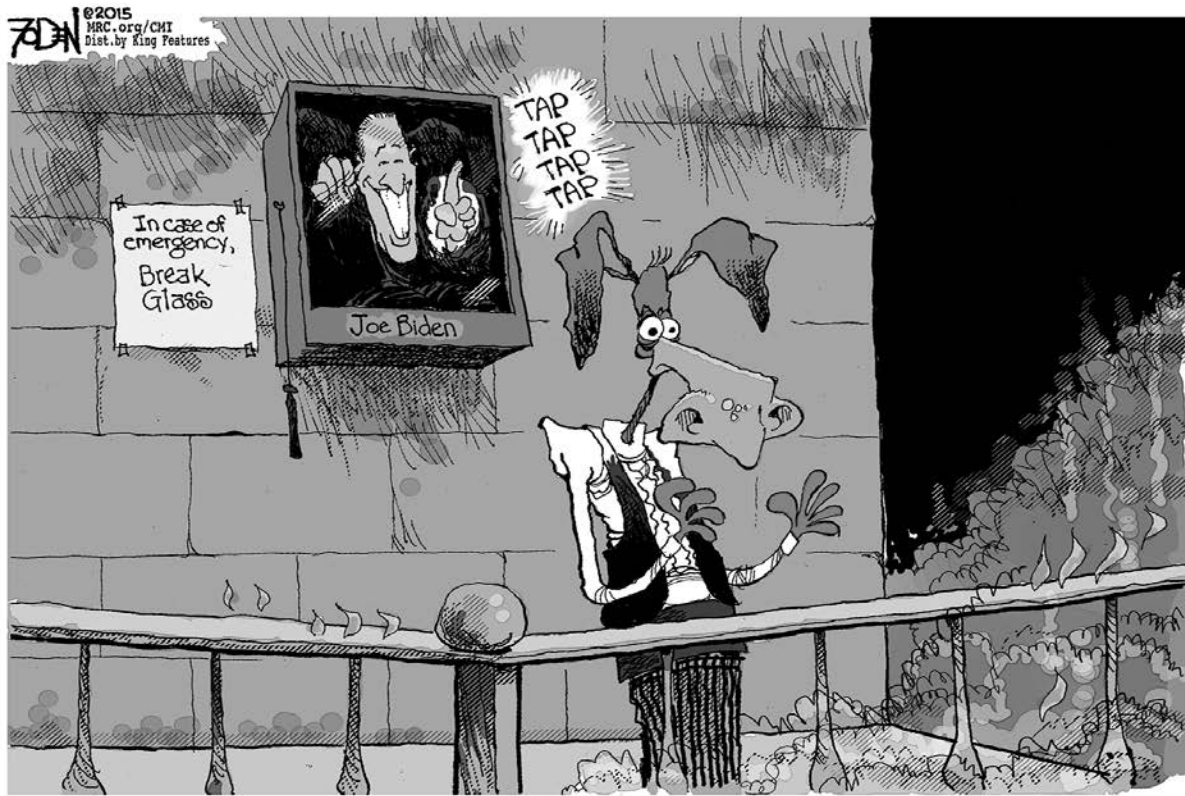

I hadn't thought about plugging watermelons in years. Time was, we'd cut plugs from melons before handing over the cash. Usually, this was from back of pick-up truck or fruit stand.

If tasting the plug didn't result in immediate salivation, we'd move on to the next melon.

Nowadays, I guess the closest we get to "sampling" produce occurs when we sneak a grape — OK, sometimes two — before plunking down several dollars for a bag. This practice may soon be outlawed. Even now, I wonder if there are cameras and sirens "at the ready" to identify grape thieves. If I'm at mid-crunch when the alarms go off, I'll get over to frozen foods in record time, donning a fake mustache en route....

Texas' own one-stop cowboy shop

In 1917, two well-known Texas landmarks opened their doors for the first time: Dallas Love Field Airport and the Oliver Saddle Shop. But while the planes flying out of Love Field look considerably different now, the saddles coming out of Mr. Oliver's Shop haven't changed much.

In fact, in the workroom of the Oliver Saddle Shop in Amarillo, you can still find 100-year-old machines in use. When I visited in July and asked current owner Richard Oliver about them, he told me, "Well, they're still good machines!"

Richard's grandfather, Claude W. Oliver, first opened Texas' oldest family-owned saddle business in Vernon. When his sons Bill and Jack took over, it continued there as "Oliver Brothers Saddle Shop" until 1960 when Bill brought the business to Amarillo, which his grandson calls the "hub of the cowboy culture." Richard, Claude's grandson, now runs the business today with his two sons Bryan and Zeb, meaning the Oliver's secrets to saddle-shaping and leather-carving have been passed down through four generations.

While the techniques and machines are the same, no two saddles are exactly alike. Each custom-made saddle is built to perfectly fit the rider's seat, and the tree — the framework that gives the saddle its shape — also differs depending on what the saddle will be used for. Traditional cowboys, who make up most of their clientele, require deep, heavy-duty seats in order to stay comfortable on a horse for 12 or more hours a day, while arena ropers prefer a shallower seat more optimal for their performance.

If you visit the shop in Amarillo, the open floor plan lets you see the art in action. Just behind the storefront, a bright light shines over a tall workbench where Bryan and Zeb stamp and carve leather belts. A full wall-length shelf holds dozens of cowhides ready to be cut, tooled, and sold. Richard told me each saddle uses about two and a half hides.

Three out of every four saddles from the shop are custom-made down to each stitch, and if you're in the market for one, you'll have to wait your turn. While it takes about a week to craft a texas times

by sen. john cornyn

saddle, demand is so high that there is about a 10-month wait list.

The wait doesn't stop folks all over the world from ordering. Cowboys as far as Germany and Japan can be found sitting on Oliver saddles, marked by their iconic triangle logo. Even President George W. Bush owns an Oliver saddle — his has the Presidential seal stamped on it.

With all of their time crafting custom saddles, spurs, bits, and chaps, this one-stop cowboy shop doesn't have much time to spend on advertising. But the Oliver's don't need to — the quality of their product speaks for itself. The biggest change in the past century of saddle sales has been the addition of a website. But the demand for Oliver saddles comes from word of mouth.

As the Oliver's will tell you, buying a saddle is a personal decision. A saddle can make or break a cowboy, and a good one will last a lifetime. Fortunately for riders in Texas and around the world, the Oliver family formula for strong, reliable saddles is currently being passed onto its fifth generation. Teenagers Colton and Austin are already learning saddle repair, and it won't be long before they take on the Oliver family rite of passage: completing their very first saddle.

Cub Reporter gets well-wishes from Florida

Home: Hospital district has no ties to facility

Sheppard's dentist office and at the time housed an office for the state health department.

Lowrie said a local error resulted in that building not being placed on the tax rolls. That error was caught by the appraisal district, and Freeborn was back assessed for a total of $2,955.52 on August 5.

"He still has time to pay that without penalty," Lowrie said.

The former Community Services Building is on the tax rolls for $71,113.

Donley County Hospital District Administrator Anna Howard said the district has had no ties to the nursing home or the dentist's office since the 2008 sale was finalized, and the district now focuses exclusively on operating the local ambulance service and paying for indigent health care.

Howard said the hospital board has not had any discussions about the nursing home, but the board has expressed interest in the professional building, which is located next to the ambulance building on the Medical Center campus. The district needs additional space for storage, offices, and training, she said.

"At our meeting on August 18 we discussed the needs for repairs to that building and agreed to offer $60,000," Howard said.

The owner declined the district's offer to purchase the building, she said.

County: Revenue projections adjusted down

4.21 percent increase in health care premiums, and adjusts expected non-tax revenues down to reflect actual income.

Income from the district and county courts for fiscal year 2015 was budgeted at $110,000 combined, but the reality has been far short of that. The proposed budget reduces that expected income by $60,000 down to $50,000, which the judge says is closer to what those courts will actually bring in.

Howard called the budget "forward looking" and said the county is working on a five-year plan to take a long range look at vehicle and equipment expenses.

The judge said he hopes to see Donley County accomplish three goals in the coming years: 1) Improve roads; 2) Move salaries to a point where the county can retain and attract competent employees; and 3) Build an operating reserve for the county.

The judge said he is taking a $2,100 pay cut from the county to help with expenses and that his office has adopted shortened hours (Monday-Friday, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.) to reduce costs.

Public tax hearings will be held September 4 at 9:00 a.m. and September 8 at 10:30 a.m., and both the tax rate and the budget will be voted on by commissioners following a budget hearing on September 14 at 9 a.m.

City: Council okays PRPC for park planning of dollars to move it ourselves," Lowrie said.

In other city business last Thursday, the council voted to submit a preliminary environmental report and assessment to the US Department of Agriculture to determine the city's eligibility for grant and/or loan funds for water system improvements.

Aldermen voted in favor of engaging the Panhandle Regional Planning Commission to develop master parks plan for the city at no charge. The plan is a necessary step if the city wishes to consider applying for grant funds from the Texas Parks & Wildlife Department next year. The master plan is expected to be finished in January or February.

The board also reviewed the proposed city budget. A budget hearing will be held September 24.

Aldermen submitted names in nomination for a steering committee to guide efforts of meeting a $500,000 challenge grant for the purpose of a water recreation facility in the city. Formal appointment of the committee will come next week.

Dockery also reported progress on possible grant funds through the Texas Department of Transportation to add a fuel facility at the Smiley Johnson Municipal Airport. Early estimates are that the project would cost about $48,703 with the city putting in about $12,000. The local funds would come from an airport CD, which holds money left from a previous grant that can only be spent on the airport.

History behind the nursing home

The Hill-Burton Act of 1946 opened the purse of federal money to help build hospitals and nursing homes in rural America.

At that time, Adair Hospital, built with funds provided by Cornelia Adair, the owner of the JA Ranch, was the main hospital in Donley County. It was a beautiful building but the facilities were old and outdated. Sometime during the early 1970s and amid controversy, the Medical Center was built as a hospital with about a 20 bed nursing home wing.

As I heard the story, one doctor left town leaving Dr. Gilkey as the only physician for the newly built hospital/ nursing home. A few babies were delivered, I don't know about surgeries but the hospital soon closed, leaving the nursing home open as a tax-supported facility and the hospital wing unused.

Ole Jim and I moved to Clarendon in 1976 amid renovation of Medical Center to reopen the hospital wing as an addition to the nursing home, making a 43 bed facility with the hope it could become self-sufficient and continue giving the best of care to the residents.

I answered an ad posted in the newspaper asking for a qualified LVN with my first day of work there February 14, 1977, and what an incredible ride that was, I retired in 1999. We cared for friends, not "room 12". We saw family members at the grocery store and church and were proud to visit with them and they with us, after all, we were family, too. The staff consisted of

Bell Ranch Rodeo Team heads to World

In the Team Roping, Elwyn and Cooper won first place, and to top it all off, their Bell Ranch Team won the Ranch Rodeo which qualifies the Team for the World Championship Ranch Rodeo in November in Amarillo.

In July, Casey McCleskey completed in the National High School Rodeo finals in Team Roping. This was held in Rock Springs, Wyo. He completed against teams from the US, Canada, and Australia. The McCleskeys – Elwyn, Pam, Casey and Cooper – formerly Hedley and Clarendon residents, now reside at the Bell Ranch, Mescarero, New Mex. where Elwyn is the horse trainer and Pam manages one of the camps.

Patsy and Kathy Spier, along with Mary Ruth White and family will be holding their "Sanford" Family Reunion on September 6 in Hedley. They have been having the reunion for 86 years since 1929. The Sanford is from Patsy's mother's side of the family.

Sandell Drive-In raises money for Mulkey

We went to the Sandell Saturday night to see Elvis Presley movies. I met the person whose dad owned the Sandell and was the creator of it. Her name is Sandra and her sister's name is Adele and if you put their names together it makes Sandell.

I got to see Elvis in the EldoBroncho and it was really funny. He was also at the football game Friday night. We raised over $1,000 for the Mulkey at the Sandell fundraiser, and I hope we do it again. I really enjoyed the Elvis movies, and also I appreciate that they donated money to the Mulkey. The Morrows are really nice people.

local women who were grateful for a paycheck, but the care of the residents came first. I made many friends, shared laughter and tears, but was ready to retire after 22 years.

Amid more controversy in about 2006, the hospital board voted to sell the nursing home to a private corporation, according to public record it was at 98 percent capacity. The new company changed the name to Community Care Center brought in new staff and began more expansion to a 60-bed facility.

Last week the news came that the nursing home has closed, and the remaining 19 residents were forced to relocate within 24 hours. How sad, my heart is heavy and I have prayed for these people who were uprooted from the facility and hope they are getting the love and care that was given at Medical Center Nursing Home.

God bless them all.

Managing pastures doesn't only mean growing grass for cattlemen

AMARILLO – What a pasture should look like – whether a waving sea of grass or one with diverse vegetation – depends on the cattlemen's final goal and actions taken before rain falls, said a Texas A&M AgriLife Extension Service range specialist.

"With the rains we've had this year, the waving sea of grass can be a cattleman's dream: no weed problems, no brush problems and plenty to eat going into the winter," said Tim Steffens, AgriLife Extension range specialist in Canyon.

"We don't get this by accident," Steffens said. "A lot of what we do before the rains determines what we get when the rains come. And taking care of this country through the drought can have a big, big effect on what happens after the drought breaks like it did this year."

But management will be the key to determining what the cattle have to eat, and how long it is available and providing sufficient nutrients, he said. Side-by-side pastures can have the same soils and same rainfall pattern but end up with a lot different vegetation.

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=qQhsg1e5tAQ&feature=youtu.be>

"Cattlemen may say they want the grass, and someone interested in wildlife will be ecstatic about the forbs and seeds that can grow," Steffens said.

"A lot of people look at forbs and say that is just a bunch of weeds, but what I want is grass.

"What I tell them all is the grass is like the potatoes in a meal, that's the energy for the livestock. Where the steak or protein comes from is the forbs."

This year pastures may have tall, mature sunflowers that have popped out and landowners may think they are no good, but when they are young, they are one of the most palatable forbs for cattle in early spring, Steffens said.

By managing the timing and frequency of grazing, the average intensity of grazing, the distribution of livestock across a landscape, and the opportunity for growth and regrowth, the land manager also can control what comes later, he said.

"Palatability of the different plants varies throughout the year, so we can manage that by timing when we are in a pasture," Steffens said.

"By grazing it at different times from year to year, managing how long we stay and how much we take while we are there, and allowing the desirable plants to recover before being defoliated again, we can increase the relative proportions of desirable plants in the pasture.

"We may also be able to make use of plants that would otherwise not be eaten by using them during the time when they are acceptable.

"Many forbs like catclaw sensitive briar, and legumes like bundle flowers and Englemann's daisy are high quality plants," Steffens said. "By mixing a little of these forbs with old dormant grass in the spring, we can really improve the diet quality and cut down on the time we have to be feeding protein supplement or hay to these cattle.

The diversity in vegetation allows the animals to mix plants of different types and take care of their dietary needs, he said.

"So just having grass or just having forbs is probably a bad thing in most cases, but having a mix of them in every pasture can sure be a big boon to us," Steffens said. "It also provides a way to have something available to respond to rain no matter when it comes."

He said many of the cool-season grasses like western wheat grass and needle-and-thread grass can be something that will come out early in the season and provide a lot of quality at that time.

"Mixing these cool season grasses with other plants can mean we can go to nearly a 10-month green season up here in the Panhandle," Steffens said.

The Clarendon Lions Club held their regular Tuesday noon meeting September 1 with Boss Lion Jacob Fangman in charge.

We had 14 members and no guests this week.

Lion Robert Riza reported on college happenings. Students are back, and things are going well as the college prepares for its accreditation visit. The Lady Bulldogs will host a four-team volleyball tournament this Friday and Saturday.

Lion Landon Lambert reported on some new laws that took effect today and said the courthouse air conditioner still isn't working.

The club was reminded of the Hedley Chicken BBQ this Thursday in the Hedley Park at 6 p.m.

Lion Mike Norrell reported on the public school and gave our program. He said enrollment at the ISD is now at 487, and the school is implementing two new programs this year. The first is a servant leadership program to encourage service to others and to recognize students who do the right thing even when no one is looking. The second program is the formation of mentoring groups where upper classmen will advise freshmen and sophomores in high school and eighth graders will help sixth graders adjust to junior high. Groups will meet on Mondays and talk about what's happening and what's expected.

With no further business, we were adjourned to spread Lionism throughout our county.

Drugs in the News

New Use for Popular Injection Approved
The United States Food and Drug Administration (FDA) approved a new use for Dysport (abobotulinumtoxinA). It is now approved to be used to help treat muscle spasticity of the upper body limbs in adults. Dysport may help reduce spasms in the muscles of the elbows, wrists, and fingers. Upper arm spasticity is a combination of muscle stiffness, some soreness, twitching, and pain. It commonly occurs after an injury to the nervous system. Improvement was seen as early as one week after the injection was administered and lasted in some people for up to twenty weeks.

Dysport is an injectable form of botulinum toxin type A that is approved to help manage a condition called cervical dystonia and may be used for cosmetic purposes to reduce the appearance of frown lines. Dysport works by preventing the release of a chemical from nerve endings causing less activity in the area of injection. Dysport is available in a vial that must be refrigerated after it is mixed with a liquid. Some of the side effects include dry mouth, injection site pain, tiredness, and neck and muscle pain.

Junior Varsity Broncos slam Tulia

The CHS junior varsity Broncos opened their season with a big win over the Tulia Hornets on the road last Thursday night at 30-26.

According to coach Brad Elam, the Broncos were able to answer everything the Hornets threw at them. "Tulia opened the scoring early in the first quarter, but we were able to answer on the next drive with a Ryan McCleskey one-yard run to tie the score at 6-6," Elam said.

Tulia was able to score again on the next possession, but Damarjae Cortez made good on a 16-yard run to tie the game once again.

"On Tulia's next possession, Cortez had a big hit that caused a fumble that McCleskey jumped on," Elam said. "McCleskey then ran it in from three yards to take an 18-12 lead into halftime."

After the break, Cortez took Tulia's kick off and ran it back 82 yards to extend the lead to 24-12. The Hornets were able to score six to cut the lead, but the Broncos' Cortez crossed the goal line on a 2-yard run to pad their lead. Tulia scored again, but the Broncos hung onto the win.

"I was very proud of the way everyone played," Elam said. "We had 15 players while they rotated 35. On defense, Isaac Dunham, Daquawne Oliver, and Bear Smith had an outstanding game."

Smith grabbed two interceptions and Preston Elam intercepted a pass that sealed the victory for the Broncos. Elam said the defense created four turnovers and on offense, Cortez and McCleskey led the way behind the blocking of Kade Hunsaker.

"It was a very good win," Elam said.

The Broncos will take on Claude at home Thursday, September 3, at 5:00 p.m. There will be a pep rally immediately following the game on Thursday.

During half-time of Friday's game the Little Miss Cheerleaders performed their cheer, chant, and dance with the Bronco Cheerleaders.

Broncos SWAT the Hornets, 46-7

By Sandy Anderberg

It was a well-rounded Bronco team that took the field last Friday night when the Tulia Hornets arrived for the Broncos' season opener.

The Broncos remembered well, the defeat Tulia handed them last year and were more than determined to right that wrong. They not only defeated soundly defeated them, they dominated their opponent in every aspect of the game even after an hour weather delay.

"It was an awful big win for us," head coach Gary Jack said. "It was a dominating performance. Our linemen set the tone for us."

The Broncos felt they could run the ball at the Hornets and were able to do just that. All seven touchdowns scored by the Broncos came on runs with the longest being made by Caleb Cobb at 55 yards. The Broncos racked up 320 yards rushing and 15 yards in the air compared to only 104 total yards for the Hornets.

"Our defense played great," Jack said. "Cobb had 11 tackles, Taylon Knorpp had 10 tackles and a sack, and Clay Koetting also had 10 tackles. Clint Franks had eight tackles and Riley Shadle had seven. Chesson Sims had four tackles and one interception and Junior Cenicerros had five tackles and one interception, and Bryce Hatley had five tackles."

Jack credited the line on both sides of the ball with executing and dominating on the field. Seth Greer, Cooper Bilbrey, Knorpp, Raylyn Shelton, Justin Christopher, Nick Shadle, and Nick Shadle all did a tremendous job for the Broncos.

And offensively, he cited Clint Franks, Chesson Sims and all the receivers for doing an outstanding job blocking. Keandre Cortez scored the Broncos' first touchdown from 11 yards out and Caleb Cobb racked up the next two scores in the first quarter on runs of two and 55 yards. Clay Koetting had back-to-back scores from three yards out to end the half. Bryce Hatley and Clint Franks both found the end zone in the second half with Koetting adding all the extra points.

"It was a solid game for us," Jack said. "We picked up several turnovers, but didn't have any. We were pleased with the win and proud of the guys and the way they played. We thought it might be hard to keep our focus during the delay, but they continued on with their dominance. It has been a great four weeks and the kids came in with great attitudes. It was a great game overall."

The Broncos will travel to Springlake-Earth next Friday night and the game will begin at 7:00 p.m. Jack knows it will be a tough game, but it will also be a good challenge for the Broncos.
