Is it really going to hurt anything for you to take your child out of school for just one day?

Paul Kennedy, school superintendent, answered this question this week by noting:

"Let me state that your child attendance in school is important to the child as he accomplishes more by being in regular attendance. It is more important to the child than it is to the school."

He added, however, that teachers are earned in public schools in Texas by the attendance of the pupils in the schools called the Average Daily Attendance or ADA.

If a school earns less than 20 teachers, that school is allotted part-time principals and no special service teachers.

If they earn the 20 teachers, the high school principal is not counted as a teacher and is free to devote his time to administrative duties.

Besides the principal, the school is allotted special service teachers such as libraries, nurses and others, which are free to the school, as the state pays all of their salary.

To earn 20 teachers, a school must have an average daily attendance of 488.

The first half of this school year, Hart school earned 496 ADA, above the number needed for the 20 teachers.

"However, during the recent epidemic," Kennedy said, "we had an alarming number of absences. We did earn, for an 11-day period of school, 443 ADA, which is far below the 488 needed for the last half year."

Speaking on financial benefits of attendance, Kennedy said:

"If the principal is free to the school, there is one free teacher to take his place. The special teacher is free to the school and we would earn two extra teachers, thereby making a total of four extra teachers added to our school at no cost to the school district."

He noted that a beginning teacher, with no experience, in Texas earns $4014 per year.

"If we multiply four times $4014, that would make a total of $14,056 or a minimum amount that would benefit the school."

He commented that the school is using the four extra teachers this year but the local district is paying them.

"If we could earn the teachers by attendance," Kennedy said, "then the district would have that money to improve the physical facilities of our school."

In order to comply with this, the school will need an attendance of approximately 96 percent.

Hart schools now have 527 pupils enrolled.

"It is readily understandable that your child's attendance is important," he said.

"It could be that one day out to go shopping could cost your child extra teachers and the school over $16,000. Keep your child in school," Kennedy concludes.

This And That

BY MYRT LOMAN

Are we as helpful in our town and community as an individual as we can or could be?

Do we take the interest in our family, our neighbor and friend that we should?

Do we patronize our home town merchants as we should? Do we spend our money in Hart, that our city might grow as some of our neighboring cities have grown? Do you count the cost of the trip to another city for your shopping when the same merchandise could be bought here and YOUR PURCHASE helps our own city. Our salaries or wages are from our own businesses or from our local soil. It is so nice to go into our local stores and get our merchandise and say charge it, and our merchants wait until our convenience to pay him.

With all our land adjoining our city, we could not find a few acres for a new business near Hart that would have increased the population of our city and increased business prospects. Do we not want new business? Just now a location is trying to be found for another new business that would be of profit to not only our city but to the farmers.

Let us as an individual try to help our town and community go FORWARD and stand still, or go backward.

There are so many little things we can do to help each other as pass our old meat grease on. A few ladies still still make home made soap. The ladies of the Church of Christ need good scraps of material, old sheets, thread and etc. to make pillows, bed pads, hot mats, pot lifters and many things for the Home of the Aged at Gunter.

A smile, a pat on the back each day to someone will help to make the day's load lighter for someone. Try it and even your load will be lighter.

This is our paper. If news is short this week, ask yourself, What did I turn in to make our paper the best? our number is 3547. The office is open on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday mornings.
