BIDS ON NEW PEASE RIVER BRIDGE AND HIGHWAY NO. 16 WORK TO BE ACCEPTED DEC. 31

The Texas Highway Department is scheduled to receive bids on Monday, Dec. 31, for the construction of a new bridge across Pease River, between Foard and Hardeman counties on State Highway No. 16, and for grade and drainage structures on Highway No. 16 from Crowell, south to the Knox County line at the Wichita River, a distance of 11.7 miles.

This information was brought back to Crowell last week by Vance Swain, county judge, and A. W. Baker and W. A. Dunn, commissioners, who spent a few days in Austin on these matters and received assurance from W. R. Ely, chairman of the highway commission that bids on these projects would be received on Dec. 31.

The new bridge will be about 30 or 40 feet east of the present structure and will be of the most substantial and modern construction.

The work on Highway 16 south of here is made possible by action of Foard County voters who authorized a six-thousand-dollar bond issue last spring for the purpose of buying the right-of-way on the new route mapped out by State highway engineers.

This approved route proceeds in practically a straight line from Crowell and to the east of the present highway. Instead of turning west at the Johnson Station, 3 blocks south of the square, the proposed route crosses the railroad just west of the local depot and continues in a straight line to the river without crossing the railroad again.

This occasion is for all denominations and everybody is invited to be present. This is meant for a personal invitation as it would be impossible to contact each one.

The "Brotherhood" of the Baptist Church is sponsoring the event.

E. E. ACKER DIED SUNDAY AT TRUSCOTT

Ernest E. Acker, 56, pioneer resident of the Truscott community, died at his home in Truscott Sunday, December 23, following an illness of five weeks. Funeral services were held in Truscott Monday afternoon, conducted by Rev. L. W. Bridges, pastor of the Christian Church of Paducah, with interment in the Truscott cemetery.

Mr. Acker was born at Blanton in Hill County, Texas, April 24, 1884. He moved with his parents to Truscott when he was five years old and had spent most of his life in that community. He was married to Miss Callie Brown on April 11, 1907. Two sons were born to this union, Gordon and Leslie.

In the year 1910 Mr. Acker united with the Christian Church. He had a cheerful disposition, accepting life as it came with a smile, never complaining. His friends were numbered by his acquaintances. He was well known over Knox and Foard counties.

Survivors are his widow, Mrs. Callie Acker, of Truscott, two sons, Gordon Acker of Knox City, and Leslie Acker of Angleton, Texas; one granddaughter, Ann Acker; two sisters, Mrs. C. C. Browning of Truscott, and Mrs. J. B. Easley of Vivian.

Guy Todd Is Named Co-Captain of '35 Team at St. Mary's

Guy Todd, former Crowell High star, has been named co-captain for 1935 of the St. Mary's University Rattlers at San Antonio. Frank Trussell of Belton is the other co-captain.

Guy proved to be one of the most valuable men for the St. Mary's Frosh this year, showing up well in the Westmorland and Lamar games and especially in the game against the Sabin All-Stars when he scored the lone touchdown to win the game on a 41-yard run.

He measures five-foot-ten and weighs 168, having gained about 10 pounds this fall. He can block, run, pass and is a power on the defense. While at Crowell High he received trophies as most valuable football player his last two years, and as best all around athlete during the same time.

In his last year, the football season of 1930, he set a record of having scored 181 points in a single season, a record that held good until smashed by a "little brother," Dick, who hung up the amazing total of 318 points for the past season.

The three Todd brothers, Guy, John and Dick, won a total of 36 letters at Crowell High. Guy led the list with 14, having won four each in football, track and basketball and two in baseball before that sport was discontinued in high school. John won four each in football and basketball and two in track, while Dick won four each in football, basketball and track.

The trio put on the brother act in 1931 when they were on the same basketball and track squads of C. H. S. Dick having reached that school at the mid-term before Guy's graduation.

Bob Oswald of Crowell is another Crowell boy who figured prominently in football at St.

Texas Co. Starts Construction On New Storage Tanks

Construction was started Monday on two new storage tanks for the Texas Company in its Foard County oil field west of Crowell. One tank is to have a capacity of fifty-five thousand barrels and the other will hold two thousand, three hundred barrels.

The Petroleum Iron Works of Houston has the contract for the construction, which will likely be completed in about four weeks. The tanks are to be located about two thousand feet south of the company's natural gasoline plant on the L. K. Johnson ranch in the western part of Foard County.

Mr. Ingalls of Houston is the foreman in charge of construction. George O'Brien of Houston and David Wade of Electra are representing the Texas Company as inspectors on the project.

Most of the 25 men working on the project are residing in Paducah due to the fact that they were unable to find places to stay in Crowell.

SECURES MAGNOLIA AGENCY

Claude Barry of Vernon last week secured the agency for Magnolia Petroleum Company products in Foard and Hardeman Counties. Austin Watkins, a resident of this county in 1920, will have charge of the operation of the business and will reside in Quannah. He is the son of H. J. Watkins who lives south of Crowell.

The Magnolia station will be operated by M. M. Watkins of Nevada, who has been living at the home of his uncle, H. J. Watkins, for the past year.

Mary's during the past season, having made an impressive record in the backfield.

SCHEDULES FOR FARM CENSUS TO ARRIVE SOON

The farmers of Foard County will be called upon soon to give a census report on their farms and farming operations for the year of 1934. The census which is taken every five years, is conducted by the Department of Commerce. According to officials of that department and also of the Department of Agriculture, every effort will be made to secure accurate information regarding the farms.

The census has in the past and will in the future play an important part in agricultural programs. The crop yields of counties over a period of years are determined to a large extent by the census figures. The total number of farms in a county and the number of livestock of various kinds, the total cultivated acres, pasture land, number of farms operated by tenants, the number of people living on farms and numerous other items of information that will be helpful to administration officials in determining agricultural programs in the future.

Sample copies of the 1935 census schedule are being sent to the county agent's office, according to a letter received recently by that office, and will be available within a few days to farmers of the county so that study can be made of the questions and information desired, before the arrival of a census enumerator.

The Department of Commerce officials state that all information given by farmers is confidential and that no individual information from any farm will be given to the public.

The county agent's office has no connection with the census work, in the appointment of enumerators or otherwise, but Mr. Rennels stated that the sample copies of schedules were being sent to the office and would be available within a few days for farmers and that any assistance possible would be rendered regarding them.

Hurt in Car Wreck

Mack Boswell, assistant editor and sports writer for The News, received painful injuries in an automobile accident Saturday night about 9 o'clock, one mile east of Plainview.

Mack was en route to Plainview to spend the Christmas holidays with his father, Geo. J. Boswell, and other relatives, when his car collided with a six-wheel truck that was parked on the side of the highway. He was blinded by the lights of an oncoming car which prevented him from seeing the truck. He received severe cuts on the face, the worst one being over one eye, four broken ribs and other minor cuts and bruises. His automobile was almost completely wrecked.

Following the accident Mr. Boswell was taken to a Plainview hospital where he has been confined since. He is reported to be improving satisfactorily and it is expected that he will be dismissed from the hospital Friday.

The girls and boys basketball teams of Margaret High continued their winning ways in a double-header program on Tuesday night of last week at Lockett, the girls winning over the Lockett girls 65 to 7 and the boys rolling up another lopsided score, 53 to 12, at the expense of the Lockett boys.

T. P. Hunter, center, led the scoring in the boys game with 23 points, resulting from 10 field goals and 3 free tosses. Bell, Middlebrook and Ingle, forwards, and Smith, Bledsoe and Blevins, guards, were other Margaret boys playing in the game.

Alice Shaw, one of the most sensational girl forwards in the state, ran up a total of 31 points in the girls game. She was selected as one of the 15 outstanding girls participating in the Southwestern A. A. U. tournament at Plainview last spring.

Texas' Struggle for Freedom Began 100 Years Ago

Century Recalls Parallels in History of Hawaii

By GEORGE TICHENOR

Exactly one hundred years ago, Texas began the march toward full Statehood, which, in the space of eleven years brought her into the Union.

Since political astronomers now predict that Hawaii will emerge as the 49th Star in the American Constellation, the event is of particular interest to Texans, for Texas shares with Hawaii, and only with Hawaii, the distinction of having been an absolute independent and sovereign nation at the time of their admission to the Union.

Occasion is Significant The significant anniversary which Texas will be observing this year has a double significance because another State in the Union is in the process of becoming, a State which has close kinship to rule—becomes dotted with missions, presidios and pueblos. But twenty-five years before the Louisiana Purchase brought Texas into geographical contact with the United States—in 1778 to be exact—the empire-minded Captain Cook, sailing from the South Seas toward what is now British Columbia, sighted quite by chance an archipelago which he called "Sandwich" in honor of his patron, a noble lord of that name.

Some straws in the wind are: the President's recent visit to Hawaii which focused the attention of the rest of the country upon the great strides made by our fellow countrymen in the Pacific; the large commercial enterprises of the Islands (Hawaii pays more internal revenue than 16 mainland States); the fact that application for Statehood is a live political issue in Hawaii, and that Joseph R. Farrington, Editor of the Star-Bulletin and son of a former Governor, has made it the principal plank of his platform, as candidate for the Territorial Senate.

Compare With Hawaii For more than four hundred years there have been certain significant and deeply interesting similarities between the histories of Texas and Hawaii. Both were discovered by Spanish explorers in the early days of the last century, the Mississippi River proved no barrier to the resistless surge of emigration westward from the southern States into Louisiana and Texas.

Two antagonistic cultures came into increasingly sharp conflict, a conflict that could end only in open and decisive warfare. Santa Anna, overthrowing the liberal Mexican government in 1834, established himself as a virtual dictator, and decided to have no more nonsense from the troublesome and too independent Anglo-Saxons who were inundating Texas. He called a conference at which Stephen F. Austin, Mexican generals and Mexican secretaries-of-state were present. Independence was flimsily denied to the land north of the Rio Grande, but at this meeting—held on October 5, 1834—Santa Anna stated that he "viewed with the greatest regard" his unruly Texan subjects. But he decided that his esteem for this stiff-necked and rebellious people needed some reinforcement, so he sent General Mejia with 4,000 troops to keep them happy. The embers of rebellion smoldered and then burst into flame. The legislature of Coahuila, early adepts of the spoils system, sold off huge tracts of the public domain of Texas to distant speculators at prices as low as one and one-half cents an acre. Texans saw themselves economically despoiled and tyrannically ruled.

Early Days in Texas Then, for more than two hundred years Hawaii fades into historical oblivion, while Texas slowly and falteringly—under Spanish

Brutality of Santa Anna Santa Anna, seeking an excuse

The glory of the Lone Star State is reflected in the beauty and stability of her Capitol at Austin.

Only ninety-seven years spans the gap between Texas' first Capitol and her last.

to use a firing squad more often, Texas armed was no more than a pirate and should be treated accordingly. This gave a mere color of legality to his practice of shooting prisoners of war, a practice of unspeakable brutality which failed completely to bend in submission the stiff knees of the rebels.

David Kalakaua, the last Hawaiian king, elected by the legislature, died in 1891 and his sister, Queen Liliuokalani, assumed the crown. She tried to put through the legislature a new constitution which would re-enact an absolute monarchy. Her cabinet refused to ratify it. In the meanwhile, a "Committee of Safety" was organized and led by Americans. They decided that the only solution for existing evils was to annex the Islands to the United States. It became a contest between the Committee of Safety and supporters of the queen. The committee became the aggressor, took possession of the Government Executive Building and proclaimed the abolition of the monarchy.

Hawaii's New Government The Provisional Government of Hawaii followed the precedent of Texas. Sanford B. Dole, "Hawaii's Grand Old Man," was proclaimed President of the new Government, with John H. Soper as general of the provisional armed forces, on January 17, 1893.

The long struggle made by Texas to join the Union came to a focus in 1845 with the passage of a Joint Congressional resolution on February 28, promptly approved by President Polk the next day. On October 13 it was ratified by a Texas general convention, and with the President's signature on December 29, the brave and venturesome republic yielded her sovereignty to become the Lone Star State.

War Brings Annexation As in the case of Texas, it required war with a foreign power to bring two American communities under the same flag. When the United States became embroiled in the war with Spain, Hawaii rendered service to our country by furnishing supplies and rest for the fleet en route to the Philippines. Negotiations proceeded rapidly, and on August 12, 1898, the Hawaiian Republic was formally annexed to the United States. Two years later, Congress passed the act which made the Hawaiian Islands a Territory. This act went into effect on July 14, 1900.

Along agricultural lines Hawaii has pioneered both from the scientific angle and from the standpoint of co-operation. Today, when a limited degree of co-operation is being forced on mainland agriculture in its own defense, we find that the Hawaiian sugar plantations have been drawn together into a closely knit and intelligently progressive organization since 1895. Due to this association, they pay their labor a higher wage than the mainland average, provide year-round-work, and assume a degree of social responsibility that is entirely unknown and impossible under conditions of unrestricted cut-throat competition.

But, today, this does not mean that Hawaii is allowed to sell this sugar to the rest of the United States. Under the Jones-Costigan Act, the Secretary of Agriculture strives to shove the Islands off into "insular possessions," in arriving at a quota for the preponderantly major product—sugar. Strangely and seriously, Hawaii is sugar and sugar is Hawaii.

Texas and Cotton Culture In Hawaii the sugar crop cycle is a full eighteen months. Diminishing the production is no matter of turning a handle or giving an order.

Though the sugar restrictions are sufficiently burdensome in themselves, the significance of the Act itself is the motive of the Hawaiian Sugar Planters' suit. They claim that it shows discrimination against Hawaii in favor of foreign nations and insular possessions, failing utterly to recognize the fact that Hawaii by the treaty of annexation is an integral part of the United States, and thus entitled to domestic consideration and treatment. The situation would be identical parallel if the Government laid down cotton restrictions which were generous in Louisiana and rigid in Texas. Hawaii does not seek to avoid her just share of the economic burden; she merely demands that just share, whether heavy or light. She demands her rights to be treated like any mainland State, and viewed in that light, her motives become patriotic rather than commercial. High principles worthy of note in this the 49th aspirant for Statehood!

A VOCABULARY TEST

How often do we find difficulty in thinking of just the right word to express a certain idea? Even the best writers must often stop to weigh their words in order to hit upon the most appropriate one, while few speakers can observe all the niceties of expression without writing out their speeches and memorizing them beforehand.

This is not due to any lack of words in the English language, however. Possibly it may be a result of our having too many to choose from. The latest unabridged dictionaries contain more than 400,000 words, and the list is increasing constantly.

Noah Webster's first dictionary, published in 1828, contained only about 70,000 words; the edition of 1864 included 114,000, and that of 1890 about 175,000, as compared with the 400,000 recognized words today.

Yet President Wilson, who was one of the foremost masters of English, in 75 public addresses used a total of only 6,221 different words. In three of his published books, however, he used about 40,000. This shows that vastly more words are used in writing than in speaking.

A leading lexicographer estimates that the educated person of fair ability understands on the average about 50,000 words, but uses only a small part, of that number in either speaking or writing. The mass of people know and use less

An interesting experiment is to inspect a few pages of an unabridged dictionary and count how many words out of a hundred you are really familiar with, both as to spelling and meaning. Try it.

THE BOOK

... the first line of which reads, "The Holy Bible," and which contains Four Great Treasures ...

by BRUCE BARTON

OTHERS TAKE UP THE PEN

The Epistle to the Hebrews, which in our Bible is attributed to Paul, was almost certainly not written by him. The style is very different from his, and it does not seem likely that he would have addressed a letter particularly to Jews. The best Greek composition in the New Testament is in this letter, and so delicate and persuasive is it that there are those who think they detect a woman's hand. Some have conjectured that Priscilla (Acts 18:1) might have been the writer. In her home Paul had a lodging, and she and Aquila, her husband, were among his very best friends.

The letter is general, but its definite purpose is to convince thoughtful Jews that they will lose nothing by embracing the new faith but, on the contrary, will gain. It says: "You can have all that you cherish most and even more in the Christian faith. Do you love your Law? Well you may, but here is the same law written more beautifully. Do you love your temple, your priesthood, your traditions? Everything you have cared for is here, and all the better."

It is noble in its conception of the basic principle of all heroism—faith. Read this grand roll call in chapter eleven:

They were stoned, they were sawn asunder, were tempted, were slain with the sword; they wandered about in sheepskins and goatskins; being destitute, afflicted, tormented; . . . they wandered in deserts, and in mountains, and in dens and caves of the earth. . . .

Wherefore seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us.

Others of the apostles now began to write. James, the brother of Jesus, had never felt wholly satisfied with Paul's doctrine of faith; he wrote a letter, a strange one for a man of such devotion to the law, of which one might almost say that it was not religious at all, so little did it regard form or ceremony.

Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world.

A younger brother of Jesus, named Jude, also wrote a short letter. It was rather an apology for not writing a longer one which he had in mind to write on "our common Christianity."

John, the son of Zebedee, also wrote, though later, three letters, one a remarkably sweet and beautiful letter addressed to no one in particular, and two short ones. Peter, also, wrote two letters and rather fine ones, as might have been expected of this blunt courageous man. But no one employed this method to the extent that Paul did. His letters were copied and lent and read and became a kind of unofficial manual for the administration of the churches.

Christian Science Services
"Christian Science" is the subject of the Lesson-Sermon which will be read in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, December 30.

The Golden Text is: "The Lord hath made bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations; and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God." (Isaiah 52:10.)

Among the citations which comprise the Lesson-Sermon is the following from the Bible: "And these signs shall follow them that believe: In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." (Mark 16:17-18.)

The Lesson-Sermon includes also the following passage from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy: "The necessity for uplifting the race is father to the fact that Mind can do it; for Mind can impart purity instead of impurity, strength instead of weakness, and health instead of disease. Truth is an alternative in the entire system, and can make it 'every whit whole.'" (page 371.)

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

by Charles E. Dunn

Tests of a Christian.
Lesson for December 30th, 1 John 5:1-12.

Golden Text: 1 John 5:1.

Every Christian can determine the reality of his faith by asking three fundamental questions. The first is, "Am I a loyal follower of the Christian ideal?" Now it is not easy to precisely define this ideal. There are many churches, many points of view. Christianity has meant one type of doctrine at one time in history, and something quite different at another time.

But all Christians can agree that we come closest to the heart of our religion in the New Testament. And one of the most precious parts of this indispensable source book is the first letter of St. John from which our lesson text is taken. Here we see, in clear relief, the abiding elements of the Christian message. Take the Golden Text, "Every one who believes that Jesus is the Christ is a child of God."

Harnack, the great modern scholar, has stated this ideal differently, but with equal impressiveness. The Christian religion he maintains, "means one thing and one thing only: Eternal life in the midst of time, by the strength and under the eyes of God."

The second question is, "Do I understand the world in which I live?" What are the underlying forces moulding and remoulding our confused, battered civilization? It is quite as difficult to know these as it is to appreciate the root meaning of Christianity. No Christian can express the Christian purpose not knowing the temper of his era.

We come now to the third and final query, "Do I know how to put the Christian faith to work in my world?" This is not easy either. It is hard to make Christianity practical in such a stormy day as ours. St. Augustine, at the time when the mighty empire of Rome was crumbling, wrote his famous "The City of God." We likewise can look beyond the burning towers of our contemporary scene to the everlasting splendor of God's Kingdom!

Miss Illah Marion Kibbey of the Kansas City Art Institute is exhibiting in New York a number of paintings of Western scenes which she made in an airplane.

SYNOPSIS

Ellen Church, 17-year-old, finds herself alone in the world with her artist mother's last warning ringing in her ears, to "love lightly." Of the world she knew little. All her life she had lived alone with her mother in an old brown house in a small rural community. All her life, first as a new baby, then a bubbling child, then a charming young girl... she had posed for her talented mother who sold her magazine cover paintings through an art agent in the city... Mrs. Church's broken life... the unfaithful husband, his disappearance... and the announcement of his death was at last disclosed to Ellen. The news of the husband's death killed Mrs. Church... Ellen, alone, turned to the only contact she knew, the art agent in New York. Posing, years of posing, was her only talent so she was introduced to two leading artists, Dick Alven and Sandy Macintosh. Both used her as a model and both fell in love with her... but Ellen, trying to follow the warped philosophy of her mother to "love lightly," resists the thought of love. Her circle of friends is small, artists and two or three girl models. Ellen attends a ball with Sandy. While dancing a tall young man claimed her and romance is born. A ride in the park, proposal, the next day marriage to Tony, and wealth. But she'd "Love Lightly," Ellen told herself. She would never let him know how desperately she loved him, even though she was his wife. Ellen insists upon living her own life, maintaining her home in her small room, even though Tony is wealthy... Jane, of Tony's wealthy set, is disappearing in Tony's sudden marriage to Ellen.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

She raised her hand, holding the glass toward her lips, but when the hand reached her lips there wasn't any glass in it. For Dick very firmly, indeed, had taken it from her fingers.

"You'll not drink to that toast, Ellen," he said, and he wasn't now, the same man who had kissed her a moment before. "In fact, you'll not drink to any toast. In fact, you'll not drink at all!"

Tony set down his glass so carefully, upon a table, that it might have been a bomb. He walked across the room rather slowly, and as he came the crowd fell away from him. The man who made the music put his accordion behind him—it was a good accordion, he never risked it!

Tony came across the floor—he came so slowly that it seemed as if he must be tired, and he didn't speak until he was so close to Dick that their coats were almost touching.

"After all," he said, and his chin had an ugly line to it, "taking it by the large, Ellen is married to me, not to you. Whether she drinks, or not, is no business of yours. It concerns us, Ellen and me."

Dick had set Ellen's glass upon a nearby table. It bubbled, all by itself, and where the light struck, it was golden.

"I should say so, too, old man," he said. "All of the worthwhile things in the world concern only you two, at this moment. But, good God, boy—I'm older than you are, and I'm very fond of Ellen, and when I see you making fools of yourselves..."

"You wouldn't consider it being foolish," Tony asked, "this business of kissing a married woman when her husband was right here? When he'd scarcely had the time—" the boy's voice shook, suddenly, "to kiss her himself..."

"I'd say it was darn foolish," Dick answered. "I'd say it was a completely dreadful lapse. I'm ashamed of myself, Brander, and I apologize to you and to Ellen. It's only that I'm so fond of Ellen..."

The girl in the white satin frock, who leaned so nonchalantly against the bar, was interrupting.

"Besides," she drawled, "kissing doesn't mean quite so much to you folk who are Bohemians. Love isn't such a staple thing with you. With us—people like Tony and me—it's more important. We don't take sex as a matter of course..."

Ellen's eyes were filling. It was twenty-four hours since she had met Tony, since she had first met him—it was twenty-four lifetimes. She couldn't speak. Neither could Dick, but a white rage possessed him. But Gay, coming forward with an empty, slim stemmed glass in her hand, was protesting.

"I'd like you to know," said Gay, and her face was a saucy gamin's face, "that some of us take sex as it comes, and kisses as they come. In studios or in front parlors—call 'em drawing rooms, if you like—have it your own way! I've done my kissing early—and so've you, if I can tell anything about it—but Ellen hasn't. Ellen's different from the rest of us. She—her name was Church before she married your boy friend—and the name suited her! Ellen hasn't gone around kissing. She's kept away from that sort of thing. She's the kind that always leaves the party, and goes home early..."

Jane sipped her daintily from her glass. It might have been molten fire that she sipped.

"Still," she said, "it does seem strange, doesn't it? I mean another man giving orders to a girl on her wedding day. Kissing her—on her wedding day!"

"That's the way I feel about it myself," growled Tony.

"Of course, I couldn't have expected that you'd understand," Dick said. He turned on his heel, and then swiftly he turned back again.

"I wonder if you'll agree with me, Brander," he said. "In this, at least! I'd like to tell you that I think Ellen's all in. You know, yourself, that she was crying when you came to my studio, to call for her. She was crying because she was nervously exhausted. That's why I didn't want her to do any drinking—she's never had a drink, you see, in the whole of her life. The poor kid's shot quite to pieces. I think, Brander, that I'd better take her home..."

Claire hadn't said anything for a long time. But she spoke, now.

"I told you, Dick," she said, "a while back, that this wasn't your scrap. I'm saying it again. For heaven's sake, lay off this butting in!"

Ellen was sobbing. Round tears were creeping down her cheeks.

"Dick's right," she was sobbing. "I don't want champagne—and I don't want to stay at this party, either. I want to go away from here! Jane, she's right, too. We're different..."

"Thank goodness for that!" said Gay.

Tony was staring at Ellen. She was conscious of the stare, although she wasn't looking at him.

"I want to go away from here," he repeated wildly, "I want to go home..."

"After all, if there's any seeing home to be done, I'll do it! After all, Ellen's married to me!" said Tony.

"But," Dick's tone was flat, "but man, she acts as if she scarcely knows you!"

Tony's face was an ugly mask.

"Whether she acts that way or not," he said, "I'm her husband!"

And—

"No matter how I act," said Ellen, "and no matter whether we've been foolish or not—that's beyond the point. Tony's right—he's my husband. He'll take me home."

With her head erect, she walked past Claire, past Gay, who had been kind, and Sandy, and even Jane. She didn't even glance Dick's way as Tony helped her into her coat, and opened the door that led from the Sans Souci to the street.

The streets were quiet. It was later than Tony, either of them, had thought. Tony drove carefully, until he reached the broad glittering avenue that bisected the city.

"Where to?" he questioned, then.

Ellen's eyes, which were almost inclined to droop with fatigue, opened very wide.

"Why, you know my address," she said. "Take me there."

Tony's voice was cold and hard.

"I suppose you're too innocent to realize," he said, "that people usually go to hotels on their wedding night. This is supposed, you know, to be our honeymoon."

"But," Ellen's voice was neither cold nor hard, "but—how can it be, Tony? We—all evening it's been so strange—all day! We can't be married, just because I'm wearing a ring. I can't be your wife just because..."

"I thought," said Tony, "that my ring was supposed to be enough, as long as my worldly goods went with it—that seems to be the consensus of opinion, too. And this evening—beginning at the moment I found you in Alven's arms, ending when he kissed you (oh, hating his feeling that you're a little sister!)—seems to prove that you were being as honest, about your emotions, as you said you were!"

Ellen's jaw was clamping down hard.

"As far as Dick goes," she said, "I don't think he acted very much less like a brother than your Jane acted like a sister. I don't see that you've got any special license to talk as you do!"

Tony's jaw, also, was set.

"I guess," he said, "that we'd better go to your room, at that. We've got to talk this thing out, you and I."

They reached her room. It was such a cool, sweet little room that the tears rushed to Ellen's eyes as she switched on the light. She'd bought everything in that room, herself—she'd made the curtains and the daybed cover; she'd painted the furniture. It was such a prim little room—it was virginal, almost. A man like Tony could never understand how much it stood for.

Tony sank down into a deep chair. He sighed, again. This time, however, it was an appreciative sigh.

"It's nice," he said, "when you get here!"

Ellen was removing her hat, and the jacket that she wore. She ran her fingers through her hair.

"Do you know," he said at last, stretching his legs out in front of him, "there's been a lot of excitement and drinking and smoking, but we haven't had anything to eat since luncheon. Maybe we're hungry. Maybe that's what's wrong with us."

Life was like that. It caught you up to the heights of hysteria. It lowered you gently into the calm of homely things.

"I could make us fried egg sandwiches," said Ellen. "Behind that screen there is a kitchenette sort of arrangement. I often cook my own supper, and always my own breakfast. There's milk, too!"

Tony wiggled his toes, in their shiny brown shoes.

"That sounds swell," he said.

So Ellen retired behind the screen, and it wasn't long before the pleasant sputter of frying—and the even more pleasant odor of melting butter and toasting bread, began to drift from around the screen. Tony sniffed appreciatively.

"We're keeping house already," he called out, to Ellen. It was as if there had never been any melodramatic, ugly scenes.

Ellen called back.

"I like this a lot better than the Sans Souci."

And Tony answered.

"I'll say I do, too!"

They ate their sandwiches eagerly, and drank their milk, from gayly painted five and ten cent store trays. There were olives, too, and cookies, and preserved peaches. It was like a party—a juvenile sort of a party. Ellen, as she bit into her sandwich, knew that she had been ravenous. Maybe that was what was the matter with them—maybe they had been hungry. Many a truce has been declared over a fried egg sandwich! Many a home has been reunited across preserved peaches and a dish of little cakes!

But even so, there were things to be said—this pleasant interlude couldn't go on forever. As she ate her second cookie, slowly, Ellen wished that the argument might start, so that it would the sooner be over.

Ellen precipitated the crisis. She was always saying things she didn't intend to say.

"Can Jane cook?" she asked.

Tony shrugged.

"I wish," she said, "that we might have liked each other, Jane and I. But I'm afraid it isn't possible."

"That," said Tony, "is the way I feel about Alven. He's a nice guy, and I don't doubt a good artist—but I'm afraid he's out. So far as I'm concerned."

"Dick," Ellen rose and carried her tray away to the kitchenette place, "Dick is so regular, Tony, you must understand that. He'd asked me to marry him, yes. But never—never—has he ever kissed me, before this day—you've got to believe that! And he'll never kiss me again. I'm sure—unless I tell him to. You can count on Dick, is a gentleman."

"And Jane," said Tony shortly, "is a gentlewoman. You can count on her!"

Ellen could have killed herself for saying it, but she couldn't help herself.

"Jane didn't make it very easy for me, tonight," she said. "I didn't think she acted like a gentlewoman, exactly. She gave me a rotten time."

Tony was flushing, but, oddly enough, he held his peace.

"I don't think she behaved very well, either," he said. "And I don't know whether or not she was in love with me. Our families were friends—our summer places were adjoining. I'm fond of Jane, too. She rides well and plays a swell game of golf, and tennis, and she can dance."

"I can dance, too," said Ellen. She offered it babyishly, with an apology because she couldn't ride or play golf or play tennis.

Tony agreed.

"I'll say you can dance," he agreed. All at once he was coming across the little prim room—and then he was on the arm of Ellen's chair, and his arm was around her.

"I'll never forget our first dance together," he said. "Will you, my darling?"

But even as their lips met, Ellen found herself wondering whether her father had said that, long ago, to her mother. She fought against the way in which she was returning Tony's kisses—she fought to keep the thoughts of her father, of her mother, uppermost.

"I'll not let you get me," she said, a trifle breathlessly, more than a trifle wildly.

Tony's arm grew tighter; he hadn't quite caught the words.

"But I have got you!" he said.

"You'll never get me," she said.

"Not really! Remember that Tony. There can be fifty girls like Jane, and they can all love you, and it won't matter to me! Remember that, Tony. Fifty girls—like Jane!"

—Think—Talk—Write—Texas Centennial in 1936
All cities must have their beginnings and growing pains. Texas has an abundance of fine thriving cities—cities that have sprung up overnight, grown into the sky from flat plains; cities that have mushroomed between oil wells and along water fronts. Here is a picture of Dallas, made in 1874, one of the rarest in existence. Dallas was a wooden town with wooden sidewalks. The only stone building to be seen in this picture is the store of Mr. Lohenstein, where hides, wool and "peltries," whatever they are, were bought and sold. The population of Dallas at that time was about 7,000. Now greater Dallas boasts 300,000 inhabitants. All of Texas has grown proportionately in population during the last 60 years. ## TEXAS HISTORY IN THE MAKING

Dallas Before It Became "Big" Dallas

—Think—Talk—Write—Texas Centennial in 1936
All cities must have their beginnings and growing pains. Texas has an abundance of fine thriving cities—cities that have sprung up overnight, grown into the sky from flat plains; cities that have mushroomed between oil wells and along water fronts. Here is a picture of Dallas, made in 1874, one of the rarest in existence. Dallas was a wooden town with wooden sidewalks. The only stone building to be seen in this picture is the store of Mr. Lohenstein, where hides, wool and "peltries," whatever they are, were bought and sold. The population of Dallas at that time was about 7,000. Now greater Dallas boasts 300,000 inhabitants. All of Texas has grown proportionately in population during the last 60 years. ## CHRISTMAS PARTY

The Co-Laborer's Class of the Methodist Sunday school entertained with a Christmas party at the church on Thursday afternoon with Mrs. O. W. Orr, Mrs. Sam Mills, Mrs. L. J. McFarland, Mrs. Joe Brown, Mrs. Lewis Ballard and Miss Minnie Ringgold, hostesses.

The guests were asked to register with their maiden names. A short program was given. Mrs. Sewell Roy read "The Gift of the Magi" by O'Henry and Mrs. C. W. Thompson and Mrs. T. B. Klepper sang a Christmas song, "Glory be to God," with Mrs. Paul Shirley accompanying. Christmas carols were sung by everyone.

Numerous games were played and an informal spirit of gaiety was manifest.

From a beautifully decorated and lighted Christmas tree, gifts were given to each one.

Refreshments, suggestive of the season, were served.

AMERICA HOMES BEST

The advantages enjoyed by the average American citizen are more impressive to B. C. Forbes, the well-known American writer on business subjects, whenever he visits Europe. He was born in Scotland and he knows his way about in Europe. He has just returned from abroad with some interesting conclusions directly in favor of our home conditions.

Telephones are rare, and newspapers do not have the wide circulation they have here, where they are regarded as a necessity in the average home. In a typical English boarding house he visited he found only one ordinary workman wearing a spotless shirt, collar and tie, and that workman was an son of Texas, who was rated as America's brightest child. Before she was nine years old she had passed examination tests showing mental qualifications equivalent to those required of a high school teacher.

When she was 12 her intelligence quotient was determined to be 214, said to be the highest ever recorded in the United States by a person of any age in a Binet-Simon test. During the following year while in college she wrote six articles which were accepted and published by Vanity Fair. These and other intellectual feats brought her much fame as a child prodigy.

Recently a New York reporter rediscovered Ellen Elizabeth, now 21, living in a small apartment in the suburbs of that city. She said she was very happy, and hoped later on to resume her literary work, which has been neglected for several years, but at present she finds other activities more expedient.

She was married several months ago to Harold S. Leach, an employee of an ice cream company, whom she declares to be a perfect husband, in spite of his limited education. She, too, has a job—as cashier for an automobile concern—which is more than a lot of other bright people can boast of right now.

The living standards of the average European family are so much lower than those of the average American family that the contrast is remarkable. Mr. Jones points out that anyone who goes into the home of the average European and observes its great burden of such equipment as is common in America to ease the burden of housewife and more economical, is thankful that he lives in the United States instead of in Europe.

Without quibbling over a discrepancy of only a hundred million or so of years, it is now quite generally accepted that the earth has been spinning in space between one and a half and two billion years, and perhaps longer.

This great age, as determined by modern science, is in marked contrast with that computed by Archbishop Ussher, the eminent Irish divine, who 300 years ago placed the date of the creation at 4004 B. C.

WORLDS WAR

Whatever may happen during 1934, it is practical certainty that more than 30,000 Americans will be killed in traffic accidents, and 75,000 injured. It is estimated that the awful death toll of automobiles does not serve as a wig to drivers and pedestrians but it appears that it does many persons who worry over minor dangers of other sorts take chances on the highways which are bound to sooner or later result in disaster.

As recent statistics show, three times as many fatalities result from automobile accidents in a single year as were suffered by United States forces during the entire World War. War cost more lives, but the automobile is responsible for more.

Among the daily automobile deaths are the about 7,000 children of school age, the greatest number being between six and twelve years. The greatest number of accidents occur between five and six o'clock in the afternoon. Drivers and pedestrians are about equally at fault in their responsibility for deaths, according to the best statistics available.

While the automobile is an indispensable convenience of modern life, it has already caused the death of almost 400,000 persons as were killed in the American armies during the found-their rate of disintegration. Radium, it has been computed, our planet must be not less than 1,850,000,000 years old. Miss Groupa's studies suggested an age of about 1,725,000,000 years.

Espada, Where Texas' First Army Gathered

—Think—Talk—Write—Texas Centennial in 1936
In 1731, two hundred and three years ago, the Franciscan fathers built Mission San Francisco de Espada near San Antonio. Continuously since that time, Mission Espada has been used for worship. The top picture shows the mission at the close of a recent Sunday service, while below is its interior. Here, in Espada's court yard, the first army of Texas gathered under James W. Fannin and James Bowie during October, 1835, and from here 300 men were sent to capture San Antonio. A glorious victory resulted, the Texans routing 1,500 Mexicans with the loss of only two men, one of them Ben Milam, whose infectious enthusiasm had initiated the assault. The brick and adobe houses bordering the large Mission de Espada court yard are still intact and occupied. (Photos by R. M. Hayes, Tyler.)
