ITALY AND ETHIOPIA

Immediate causes of the threat of war between Italy and Ethiopia are somewhat obscure, but they arise from treaty disputes and mutual jealousies of long standing.

An effort to establish such a protectorate was made as far back as 1886, but it was decisively defeated in 1896, when at the battle of Adowa an army of 12,000 Italians was annihilated by some 80,000 Ethiopians under King Menelek.

Ethiopia has an estimated population of about 10 million, while Italy has more than 44 million. The Italians would have a great advantage in numbers and in modern war equipment, but would have to fight the war on far distant soil.

Even if successful, it seems doubtful that Italy would gain enough to offset the great losses in men and money which her victory would inevitably cost.

Efforts are being made by the League of Nations, and also by England and France, to avert war, but owing to the stubbornness of both Mussolini and Selassie the prospects for continued peace do not appear very bright.

RUSSIA'S HANDICAPS

Why the industrial ambitions of Russia are doomed to frustration is told rather convincingly by Isaac Den Levine, former foreign news editor of the New York Tribune, in his book "Red Smoke."

Russia has less coal deposits than the state of Wyoming, and seven-eighths of Russia's coal reserves are almost inaccessible and thousands of miles from existing or planned industrial centers.

The main timber zones are likewise located in remote and almost uninhabited areas, which the Soviets themselves admit are handicapped by "lack of labor and are separated from consumers of firewood by great distances accentuated by extremely poor communications."

Russia has important oil deposits, but there are also unfavorable factors. Being a flat country, its waterpower possibilities are limited. Its mineral resources of iron, copper, silver and gold are scanty.

Even agriculturally, Mr. Levine declares, Russia's resources are inadequate for the immense population. The soils of the north are too cold, while the southern zone is subject to droughts.

Taken all in all, it appears that Russia's economic threat to the "capitalistic" world is mostly a bluff, or so it will prove to be for many years to come.

Crowell Loses 9-7 to Goree Ball Club

Goree, Wichita Valley League leader, defeated Crowell 9 to 7 in a practice game last Sunday afternoon at Goree. This was one of the most closely contested games that Crowell has played this season.

At three different times, the score was tied. Goree ran in 3 runs in the 8th inning and the Crowell club was unable to overcome the lead.

Crowell out-hit the Knox County club 15 to 12, but Goree's hits intermingled with hit batsmen and walks caused Crowell's downfall. Lewis Sloan and Pete Bell led the Crowell batting attack with three hits each.

Score by innings: R, H, E. Crowell—014 020 000—7 15 5. Goree—210 300 03x—9 12 3.

Batteries: Crowell—Rashberry, W. Bell, Russell and LaRue. Goree—Jackson, Moore and Hutchens. Losing pitcher, Bell; winning pitcher, Jackson.

Corn-Hog Advisory Committee Endorses Natl. Administration

College Station.—Officers of the Texas Corn-Hog Advisory Committee who were elected here during the 26th annual Farmers' Short Course were: J. P. Strader, Canadian, chairman; J. S. Sharp, Paris, vice chairman; and S. M. Ainsworth, Gonzales, secretary-treasurer.

The committee, which acts for the approximately 38,000 corn-hog producers in 225 Texas counties, commend the national administration for its effort to give farmers parity prices for commodities and to give producers of agricultural commodities a protection similar to that given manufacturers and other commercial interests.

In endorsing the Texas Agricultural Association in its effort to expose the unconstitutionality of high protective industrial tariffs which have been of great damage to the interests of the majority of farmers, the committee said: "We call on all the people of Texas to assist us in our struggle for a fair deal which is of great importance to the people in all occupations just as well as to those engaged in farming."

The committee commended the corn and hogs section of the Agricultural Adjustment Administration in Washington for the splendid way in which the program was carried out in Texas and expressed appreciation of the farmers to the Extension Service for the capable way in which the program has been handled.

The corn-hog advisory committee is composed of nine members, one from each district in Texas, elected by the presidents of the corn-hog associations in the district. Members are J. P. Strader, Canadian; J. S. Sharp; S. M. Ainsworth, Gonzales; O. J. Elder, Crosbyton; R. E. Lee, Mason; George Slaughter, Wharton; Otho Morris, Laneville; Judson Wood, Sherman; and W. J. Fritts, Commerce. All were present at the first meeting of the committee except W. J. Fritts.

Securities Racketeer Hard Hit by New Law

There's this much you can say for a rattlesnake—At least he warns before he strikes!

As much cannot be said for the stock promoter and seller of the blue sky and boundless sea. By subtle means, fair or foul, he gains the confidence of his victim, fleeces him or her of every available dollar and is gone again. That's the method of operation of the Securities racketeer, according to Secretary of State Gerald C. Mann, administrator of Texas new Securities Act, designed to drive out of Texas the sellers of spurious securities.

The new law became effective May 23 of this year. Today a few of the tangible results may be summed up as follows:

Two sets of operators are under indictment awaiting trial for violation of the law. Other cases are pending. The operations of one of these parties extended from coast to coast and Canada to Mexico, with headquarters in San Antonio. He is known to have received as high as $5,000 daily from the investing public, most of whom were not able to afford the loss.

In El Paso a gang that has mulcted some $300,000 or more from credulous investors in the past four years, folded their tents and departed shortly after the arrival of that city of an investigator from the Department of State. It is impossible to compute the savings thus afforded. In another Texas city a stock salesman returned $4,000 to one of his victims when appraised that the State Department was investigating the matter.

"But the job has only begun," Secretary Mann declares. "Our objective is to rid this State of these racketeers, so far as is humanly possible. It can be done only with the assistance of the people of Texas. No purchaser should buy any form of security without first determining if the seller is registered and licensed by the Department of State. We should likewise be appraised of cases of fraud. The time has come when the securities racketeer must take his rightful place alongside the convicted murderer, hijacker and common thief—behind prison bars."

LEE DIED A PRISONER

It may not be generally known that General Robert E. Lee was technically a prisoner of war at the time of his death in 1870, but such is the case, according to a writer in the Pathfinder.

After Lee's surrender to Grant at Appomattox on April 9, 1865, he was released on parole. President Johnson's amnesty proclamation issued the following month did not include Confederate officers above the rank of colonel, or any who had been educated at West Point or who had resigned from the United States army to join the Confederacy, so Lee was ineligible for amnesty on all three counts.

Johnson provided, however, that these in the excepted classes would have their applications for pardon considered and Lee made application accordingly, but his request was entirely ignored by the President. The terms of Lee's parole were respected, however, and he was never molested, although he was never restored to citizenship. As is well known, after the war General Lee accepted the presidency of Washington College at Lexington, Va., and remained in that office until he died, when the name of that institution was changed to Washington and Lee. But at the time of his death he was still a paroled prisoner of war, deprived of his civil rights.

Health Dept. Urges Special Milk Care

Austin, Texas, Aug. 15.—In view of the fact that Governor Alfred has proclaimed the week beginning August 12 as Dairy Week, Dr. John W. Brown, State Health Officer, urges with this more extensive use of milk, that both producer and consumer be concerned as to its quality. The use of clean safe milk is a health measure.

Local interest in improved methods of producing wholesome milk has increased greatly in the past two decades and the striking advance in milk control has been responsible for the enormous saving in infant life.

Milk is perishable and especially during hot weather. To insure milk of good quality requires cleanliness, sterile utensils, protection against flies, careful bottling and maintenance at low temperature. The presence in fresh milk of large numbers of bacteria, due to insanitary methods of production, is a health hazard.

Among the diseases which may be transmitted through milk are tuberculosis, typhoid fever, scarlet fever, diphtheria, septic sore throat, and undulant fever. Numerous milk-borne outbreaks of disease occur every year in this country from the use of milk that might have been safe with proper care.

We should firmly insist that the milk we drink be carefully produced, so that we will have the maximum practical protection along the line from the cow to the consumer.

and soap, changing water each time. As for treatment, local applications of solutions of cooking soda or Epsom salts, one or two teaspoons to cup of water, are as helpful as any."

Elmer Plays Crowell Here in Final Game on Regular Schedule

Crowell and Elmer will play here Sunday afternoon in one of the final scheduled games of the regular Cotton Belt season. The other final game will take Truscott to Quanah. Medicine Mound draws a forfeit from Eldorado on account of Eldorado dropping out of the league.
Crowell has clinched the top place in the league standing, however, Elmer will be playing its best to win in an effort to hold second place.
Truscott is also very anxious to win over Quanah, since a victory would place Truscott in a tie for fourth place, making the team eligible for the playoff for top honors under the Shaughnessy play-off plan.
Unless there is a tie with some of the second, third or fourth place teams, which would necessitate a play-off of the tied teams, Crowell will meet the fourth place club here Sunday, Aug. 25, and the second and third place clubs would also play the same day and the two winners would then clash in a series of three games to determine the league winner.
The Elmer club has one of the strongest teams in the league and a good game is expected when the Oklahomaans clash with the local nine here Sunday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock. Rashberry and LaRue are probable starters for Crowell, with Meeks and Griffin as pitcher and catcher, respectively for Elmer.

The grounds are located one mile northeast of Margaret. Admission is 15 and 25 cents. Mr. Middlebrook has had a large number of circulars printed in advertising the event over this section.

SOME SUPERSTITIONS

Among the hundreds of superstitious beliefs still held by otherwise intelligent people may be named the following, compiled by a recent writer.
It is bad luck to spill salt or break a mirror. Putting on a garment backwards or wrong side out by mistake brings good luck. Fish is a brain food. Handling a toad will cause warts. Only the good die young. It is unlucky to light three cigarettes with one match. Friday and the 13th of the month are unlucky, especially if they happen to fall on the same day. To pick up a pin means good luck. Crops should be planted according to the moon. Knocking wood averts a penalty for boasting of former good luck.
The list of such superstitions and beliefs is almost endless. And it is not only the ignorant who act upon such beliefs. Most people, including those who have achieved greatness, have their pet superstitions. To mention only a few: President Lincoln was superstitious about dreams. President Cleveland always carried a horse chestnut in his pocket for luck. Mussolini consults astrologers. Bill Tilden of tennis fame carries a share." And she reflected, as though arguing with herself: "No good in blame, anyway, after a thing's done. Let a person catch their death of cold and it don't matter how they caught it. It's too late to cure Amy now."

"She might have kept her head up," Jenny urged. "It needn't have broken her down!"

The old woman said, with a harshness in her tone that she did not often use toward Jenny: "Don't talk like a fool! Being brave is all right; but no matter how brave you be, there's times it won't help you!"

The girl sensed something hidden in her tone. "Why, granny? What do you mean?" she asked. "I dunno as I know," Marm Pierce confessed. And she cried suddenly, flaming with high wrath: "Child, if I knowed for certain, think I'd be a standing here?"

"But what could you do?" Jenny whispered, all bewildered.

"A-plenty," Marm Pierce told her, stoutly. "I'd know enough to do."

Yet more than this she would not say.

Jenny did not go to Amy's funeral. Marm Pierce that day suffered an onset of lumbago, and lay prone while Jenny slowly ironed her back with a hot flatiron over blankets, till the old woman writhed from the heat, yet declared she felt better by and by. Jenny was as well pleased to stay at home. Will would have been at the burying; and Jenny might have seen him there; and she shrank from seeing him. To do so could only open a fresh old and weary wound. He must be, she thought, somehow broken by these months that were gone; to see him, to see his grief and weariness might provoke in her a storm of anger which she could not govern and control. So Jenny willingly stayed at home, nursing in her heart the image of Will as he had been, covering him and shielding him with her love, drawing it around him like a buckler against all he must day by day endure.

They had during that summer word now and then of Will, and of Zeke and Huldy, too. The word ran through the valley that now- days Zeke never went where Huldy did not go. Marm Pierce and Jenny heard that he trailed Huldy like a dog, like a jealous dog, nipping at the heels of those who came near her. Once during the summer the valley was filled with rumor of a fight he had, with one of the men from the mill, till he was soundly whipped by this man half a head shorter than himself. And in September there were vague, fragmentary reports that he had struck Huldy, had tried to choke her, in some passion of anger at her for a cause unknown.

There were whispers in the wind, words, phrases, lies and truths and dim conjectures; and each was in itself fragmentary and almost meaningless, but out of them all, Jenny began to form a picture in her mind. Will, it appeared, made no effort to send Zeke away; he treated Zeke with a slow courtesy, and Huldy, too. He seemed to preserve by his demeanor the fiction that Zeke was a loyal hand, a willing hand about the farm; that Huldy was a wife should be, Old Win Haven, according to rumor, taunted him one day; and then shrank in affright before Will's blazing eyes, and babbled his apologies, withdrawing the offending word. This had happened in Liberty village, by the store, with other men about; and it was said that Will had looked like death, till the others hurried Win away.

And Jenny thought: Huldy moving insolently to and fro about the farm, doing the housework with a casual ease—it was agreed that she was a good housekeeper—idling along on the ledge above the brook, strolling in the orchard or across the fields; and always with Zeke like a jealous guardian on her heels.

Zeke, someone said, was not so stalwart as he had used to be. He had begun to cough, and to lose weight. It was even predicted that he might not live the winter through. Bart came to the door one day, on his way home from the village, and he said:

"Huldy and Zeke was in Liberty today. Drove over in Will's sleigh." This was in February, with snow deep on the road. He chuckled. "If Zeke and me went at it again, I guess I could handle him now. He's failed pitiful, this last six months."

"You leave the pore thing be, Bart," Marm Pierce warned him. "He's got enough trouble on his hands."

Bart nodded soberly. "It's a wonder to me how Will stands it," he confessed. "I see her today. She's the same as ever, with an eye for every man around and that smiling way she has."

Marm Pierce, putting away the parcels he had brought, asked with a glance toward the dining room whether Jenny had withdrawn:

"Will wa'n't along with them to-day?"

"Didn't see him, no," Bart returned. "He stays to home, the most of the time."

And he chuckled, and said: "It was funny to see the men today, kind of circling, and watching, like they was waiting for something. Like a bunch of crows around a sick horse, waiting to see what was going to happen next." And he said: "Zeke, he won't last long!"

"Guess you won't go to his funeral when he dies," Marm Pierce commented.

"Oh, I don't hold a thing against Zeke," Bart assured her. "I figure I've got all the better of our argument by now."

"How would Amy feel about that," the old woman demanded; and Bart said slowly:

"Pore Amy!" But he rose as though unweary. "Well," he declared, "I'll be going along."

After he was gone, Marm Pierce Jenny helping her; but when they had finished the meal, as though after long reflection, the old woman said: "Child, there's things the less said about them the better; but I can feel it in my bones, something's goin' to happen around here. I dunno what it'll be; but I don't want you mixed up in it."

Jenny looked at her gravely. "What can happen, granny?"

The old woman hesitated. "I dunno as I know," she confessed. "But Jenny, don't you let what hurts other folks hurt you." She added vigorously: "And don't let other folks hurt you, Jenny. There is apt as not to be trouble. Don't get in the way of no one. One of these days somebody, some man, goin' to . . ." She shook her head. "Child," she said, "I don't know what I'm scared of, but I'm scared."

"Of what?" Jenny protested reassuringly.

"If I knowed that, I'd know what to do," the old woman retorted; yet she said slowly: "Amy died of it, Jenny. I don't want a thing to happen to you."

Jenny could not understand; yet she could share her grandmother's doubts and fears. This season from late February till the flood tide of summer must always be a weary one, when nerves are ragged and frayed; and especially in this marshy land where the inhospitable earth is still unwilling to receive the stroke of plow, so that man can only wait, his energies restrained and fuming for an outlet, till the time for action comes.

This year, the season of waiting was a long one; the frost was deep, the spring was slow. Rains came drenching the valley in a smothering fog, drowning the springing vegetation. The brook was in a roar of freshet for days on end; and the roads were almost impassable. But—they heard that Zeke had outlived the winter after all; and on the surface all things went on unchanged. Yet in the valley a sinister expectation began more and more to dwell.

Bart stopped at the house one morning, the wheels of his buggy mud-clogged to the hubs, to take commissions for shopping at the village; and after he was gone, it rained again, so that they were kept all day indoors. Dust came early, till the lamps in the kitchen and dining room made all snug and warm. Marm Pierce and Jenny began to prepare supper; and the old woman went out to survey the weather signs.

"It might lift tomorrow," she said. "The wind's this way, that way, now; but if it shifts, we'll get a change."

Jenny made no comment, and the old woman added: "With so much rain, things ain't started to grow yet. It'll be a late spring, and sudden. First touch of sun, and everything will grow a week in a day. A spring like this, I can't get my simbles when they're right."

"I'll go tomorrow and see what I can find," Jenny offered.

"You can get me a water lily root, anyway," Marm Pierce reflected. "If the water ain't too deep."

The girl said: "There's a pool down toward the bog with an old log in it, and lilies grow in back of the log. It's not deep there. I can reach down."

Marm Pierce opened the oven to see if the biscuits were done, and a blast of hot air struck her in the face. "Whew!" she exclaimed, and closed the oven. "I'm bound to air out or suff'cate," she said, and opened the kitchen door.

Then she ejaculated: "Bart! I never heard you come up on the porch. Where's your team?"

Jenny turned and saw Bart there on the porch, just outside the door. "Mud's too deep to git in here and not founder," he explained. "I walked over from my house. Here's yore things!"

Marm Pierce spoke sharply. "Well, don't come tracking into my kitchen," she said, and took his burdens from him. "Much obliged. Good night to you."

And she pushed the door shut with her knee.

Jenny, relieving her of some of the parcels, said in amusement: "You cut him off pretty short. Might have asked him in."

Demand GOOD LIGHTING

NOT THIS WAY
Inadequate and improper lighting conditions cause near-sightedness and eyestrain in children.

BUT THIS WAY
The STUDY LAMP provides light of the right quality and quantity for reading or studying.

More than half the boys and girls who fail in their studies have defective vision!

That puts it squarely up to parents to provide proper lighting conditions for study and reading. For poor lighting is the chief cause of eye strain and near-sightedness, in children.

If your child holds his book abnormally close to his eyes when reading, or if he squints, or complains of headaches . . . beware!

To make sure that your child will have proper lighting when the duties of the new school year arrive, let one of our representatives make a free survey of your home. The sightmeter will tell you the results. Your local office will be glad to tell you when our lighting representative is available.
