

Gin Feeder-Cleaner Boosts Gin Efficiency

Mobile Field Unit, Gin Feeder-Cleaner

COLLEGE STATION, Tex. — Engineers at Cotton Incorporated and here at the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station have developed a gin feeder-cleaner that removes over half the trash in seed cotton while improving the efficiencies of an automatic gin feeder.

The feeder-cleaner is being developed as a complete unit that can be used by gins that don't already have automatic gin feeders or as a cleaning unit that can be attached to existing automatic gin feeders, says J.K. "Farmer" Jones, Cotton Incorporated president and associate director of agricultural research. Cotton Incorporated is the fiber company of American cotton producers.

Jones has been working on the project with Lambert H. Wilkes, professor of agricultural engineering at Texas A&M, and Gary Underbrink, a research associate at Texas A&M.

Tests in a variety of situations in Texas have shown the feeder-cleaner removes 50 to 60 per cent of the total trash from brush harvested cotton. It removed about 50 per cent of the sticks in the trials and improved feeding efficiency by about 20 per cent over conventional suction pipe feeding, says Wilkes.

"That 20 per cent increase in efficiency does not take into consideration the improvement in gin capacity by having removed half of the trash," adds Wilkes.

The equipment is the outgrowth of work on the automatic gin feeder, which is used to feed modulated cotton into gins.

In research on ways to improve the automatic gin feeder, Jones and Wilkes studied high speed movies of the operation of spiked cylinders of an automatic gin feeder. They discovered that as the cylinder speed was increased, a separation of the trash from the seed cotton occurred.

"From that point, it was just a matter of developing the equipment to take advantage of this natural phenomenon," explains Wilkes.

The mobile feeder-cleaner used in field tests in 1976 and early 1977 consists of a 20-foot hopper section into which the seed cotton is dumped. A power driven live bottom feeds the cotton into a row of five spiked cylinders, much as in an automatic gin feeder, which break apart the mass of cotton.

The spiked cylinders throw the cotton and trash, which becomes suspended in air and separated, toward standard saw-type cleaning cylinders. Between the dispersal cylinders and the cleaning cylinders are a row of paddles which keep the cotton and trash suspended and separate. On the floor is a sweeper reel to pick up fallen seed cotton.

The saw-toothed cylinder holds the seed cotton, while the momentum carries the trash over a bar and into an auger which carries the trash away. The trash is run through a reclaiming unit which removes most of the seed cotton that otherwise would be lost after the initial cleaning.

The seed cotton is accumulated in a sump, from which it can be removed with a fan.

One of the keys to the success of the feeder-cleaner, explains Wilkes, was the discovery that a vertical arrangement of the cleaning cylinders in tandem was much more efficient than the traditional arrangement of cleaning cylinders in a series, as is done in most gins.

The researchers also settled on 1,000 rpm as the optimum speed for the dispersal reels to get maximum separation of seed cotton and trash.

Underbrink conducted tests of the equipment in the Brazos Valley and in the High Plains of Texas.

He found the feeder-cleaner consistently removed over half of the trash with a loss of about one per cent of the seed cotton.

"We are looking at, in some areas, removing as much as 1,000 pounds of trash per bale," says Underbrink. "That means for every bale going into the gin, the mechanical handling system of that gin handles 1,000 less pounds. That will mean that much less wear and tear on equipment, plus save the energy required to move that trash, in addition to the improvements on the gin's capacity."

The estimated cost of building the equipment is about $30,000 to $40,000, says Jones.

One bonus of the feeder-cleaner, says Ray Faulker, manager of Canyon gin where some of the tests took place, is that the inside of the gin seemed to have a lot less dust flying about while the feeder-cleaner was being ginned.

Jones said further studies will be made to determine whether the feeder-cleaner reduces the dust level in the gin.

So, the JayCees are really grateful for the response from the Shallowater people at this first annual doubles tournament.

We very much appreciate the support and considerations from the Circle S. Food store, who really made this tournament possible. Tommy Sewell was out a great deal of expense and time in his efforts to sponsor and promote this tournament. The Jay Cees thank Mr. Sewell and encourage the players and the rest of the community to express their gratitude to him.

Building Permits up

Over $700,000 in building permits have been issued at City Hall so far this year, which indicates that Shallowater is expanding at a rapid pace with residential projects accounting for $632,950 of the total with 15 new homes either under construction, or already finished and occupied.

Remodeling accounted for $19,050 and Joe Wood Construction received a permit for the construction of a Dairy Queen drive-in at an estimated cost of $55,000 located at Highway 84 and Farm Road 179.

The growth of Shallowater has expanded at a steady pace over the past few years and although the city limit sign still shows 1339 population, it has been estimated that the population of city now stands at over 2000 people.

In growing, Shallowater has a lot to offer with a modern banking facilities, grocery stores, a pharmacy, and the Shallowater Clinic that opened its doors to receive patients around the first of December, last year. It also has the huge Whites Warehouse, Inc. and R.L. Stone Construction Co., with both Companies having several employee's on the payroll.

Letter to the Editor

On behalf of the Shallowater JayCees, I want to thank all the contestants in our doubles tennis tournament this past weekend (June 17-18). They provided some superb tennis, all of which was complemented by the observance of proper tennis etiquette.

I also need to issue a very special thanks to Mr. Tommy Sewell who unselfishly provided the beautiful trophies (24 in all), as well as other considerations for our tournament. He generously helped advertise and promote this event to help make it a tremendous success. Moreover, he offered to make a large donation to enhance our proceeds, which we have earmarked for the Shallowater clinic, our primary purpose for the tournament from the beginning.

In addition, I want to express my gratitude to those members of the JayCees and their wives who worked tirelessly in the concession stand and supervision of the tournament to insure a smooth comfortable environment for the players and spectators at the tennis courts.

Fianly, I thank this paper for their interest and coverage of this tournament, as well as all other activities of the Shallowater JayCees.

The JayCees really enjoyed the tournament and look forward to another next year!

KELLY'S HEROES

by Joe Kelly

Reggie Jackson had the reputation for being hard to handle when he was with Oakland and then Baltimore. A change to the Yankees doesn't seem to have changed the situation.

Saturday, right there in view of the world, Jackson displayed temperment. He did what he has a reputation for doing, loafing at times. Some might call it conserving energy, but baseball players and managers don't look on it that way.

Certainly Billy Martin doesn't, and didn't. He wasted no time in sending Jackson to the bliss of an early shower and then obviously exchanged strong words. Billy may not be big, but he won't back off from anyone and he didn't with Jackson.

Cooler heads prevailed, although the sting is bound to remain. Had Elston Howard and Yogi Berra not stepped in, the world might have been treated to a better fight than is usually on tv.

The question now, of course, is what will be the next move? Rumors of dissension on the New York club have been common and this incident only points up more sharply the situation.

Jackson is supposed to have no use for Thurman Munson, the Yankee captain. And who knows how much else is going off? Martin said afterwards that he would have a talk with Jackson last year.

In Martin's mind, then, is the seed of a trade, to rid the Yankees of the big slugger and maybe bring peace to the club. Heaven knows that, with the situation as it is, the chances to the New York Club winning are remote.

Whether getting rid of Jackson would solve the problem is something else. Sometimes when you cut out a cancer you do solve the problem. With Jackson, it might not be true. It will be interesting to see what happens.

If Tom Seaver was upset about leaving the Mets, he didn't show it in his first start. He not only tossed a shutout, he also had two hits and drove in two runs.

It's entirely possible that the biggest trade in a long while could mean a pennant for Cincinnati, and in a breeze. The Reds obviously have everything it takes to be a repeat champion, not only of the National League, but also of the world.

Frankly, if I was a Met fan, my loyalty would be strained to the breaking point by J. Donald Grant, or whatever his name, chairman of the board. One wonders if the board backed Mr. Grant, or if they took the action of trading Seaver on his own.

There are, of course two sides to the matter. Tom Terrific apparently was pleased with his contract when he signed it. It wasn't until later, when other and bigger contracts were doled out then he became unhappy. That's when he demanded renegotiation.

Now, the time to renegotiate is not, literally, in the middle of the stream. You ought to wait until the season is over, or the contract comes up for renewal.

In this case Seaver didn't wait. He moaned so long and so loud that Grant finally traded him, thus creating no lack of anguish on the part of the Mets fans. And wouldn't it be funny if the Reds refused to offer Seaver a better contract?

Grant isn't through with problems. The mets aren't in first place and hardly before the dust had settled on Seaver, Grant had dealt away Dave Kingman, who hadn't signed his contract and also was unhappy. Kingman was the senior circuit's home run King.

Thus, Grant, removed the top pitcher and top long ball artist from a team that might yet make a challenge. The chances of doing that are remote now, but anything can happen in baseball.

Seattle Slew ran off with the Belmont and the Triple Crown of racing, thus putting to rest the diehards who said that Slew really wasn't much of a horse, just lucky.

Maybe, so but show me anyone who is good and I'll show you somebody who also has luck—most of the luck coming from the successful man's efforts. Slew met every challenge and remained unbeaten. He has to be a super horse anyway you look at it.

Arkansas generally is considered the odds-on pick to repeat as Southwest Conference basketball champion, but Johnny Swaim and TCU think that they might have something to say about it.

The Horned Frogs have signed eight prospects and only three are Texans. The out-of-staters come from Illinois, Ohio, Missouri and Florida. The players are four guards, two centers and two forwards. The guard stand 6-2, 6-2, 6-2, 6-1, the centers are 6-9, 6-8, and the forwards are 6-6 and 6-4.

The top three prospects, in Swaim's opinion, are 6-2 guard Jim Hund from Mascotah, Ill, 6-9 center Larry Frevent from Raytown, Mo., and 6-6 forward Steve Scales from Minteral Area Junior College Mo.

Cotton Allotment Bill To Be Introduced in House

MEMPHIS, Tenn., June 16 (Special)—A bill updating procedure for determining upland cotton allotments will be introduced in the House of Representatives this week.

The National Cotton Council has been advised by Rep. David R. Bowen (D-Miss.), chairman of the House Agriculture Subcommittee on Cotton and author of the bill, that a subcommittee hearing on the proposal has been scheduled for 10 a.m., June 28.

The bill incorporates recommendations developed by the National Cotton Council's Producer Steering Committee and authorized by Council delegates in a mail ballot.

The House Agriculture Committee had updated allotment systems for wheat and feed grains when it reported the farm bill in mid-May. However, at Bowen's suggestion, it deferred action on cotton allotments pending completion of the producer study. The Senate-passed farm bill includes an amended Administration proposal for all crop allotments.

The Producer Steering Committee proposal for cotton follows the House and Senate bill concept for wheat and feed grains by basing "farm allotment" on acreage the farmer decides to plant. Under this concept, government payments would be made to farmers only when the average price they receive during the calendar year is less than the established "target price."

Under the proposal:

(1) The national program acreage for cotton would be announced no later than Dec. 15 for the next year's crop.

(2) If payments are to be made, the allocation factor (not to exceed 100 percent) would be obtained by dividing the national program acreage by the estimated harvested acreage.

To obtain the acreage on which payment may be made, the allocation factor would be applied to cotton acreage planted on the farm. However, the factor would not be applied to any farm where acreage was voluntarily reduced from the previous year by as much as the recommended percentage. These exemptions would be taken into account by the Secretary of Agriculture in setting the allocation factor.

(4) Program payment yields would be established each year on the basis of a farm's actual yields per harvested acre for the preceding three years. Adjustments would be made for abnormal weather and conditions, with appraisals where yield data are not available.

(5) The Secretary would be empowered to require producers to set aside a prescribed acreage of cropland on their farms (not to exceed 28 percent of the current cotton acreage). He could also permit planting and other use of set-aside acreage under certain conditions.

(6) Should additional allotment adjustments become necessary, the Secretary would be authorized to limit cotton acreage planted on farms by applying a factor to the highest acreage planted—including prevented planting—on the farm in the preceding five years. Penalty for farms not complying would be ineligibility for loans and payments.

As in the Senate bill, producers would be eligible for payments if plantings are prevented. In the case of low yields due to disasters, payments may be made on the farm's entire planted acreage.

Persons wishing to testify at the June 28 hearing on the proposed Bowen bill should contact the clerk of the House Agricultural Committee.

Those attending from this area included Yates and Viola Oldham, Glen and Sharon Hobgood, Sue and Wayne, Wyatt, Krysta, Vince, and Keli of Lubbock and B.V. (Slim) and Faye Oldham of Shallowater.
