Shallowater's Police Chief Finds Problem Areas Changing, Drugs Most Worry

"I believe that law enforcement in our society is a must and that exercising the rights invested in a peace officer should be administered fairly and justly to all people," said Shallowater Chief of Police, Jim Trulove, in an interview with Suburban Today representatives this week.

Trulove, who came to Shallowater as Chief of Police in 1973, has had law enforcement experience in his hometown of Memphis, Texas, after starting his career with the Lubbock Police Department in 1968 and serving through 1971. He has also served with the Hereford, Texas Police Department, along with Sheriff's Departments in both Donley and Lubbock County. Trulove, who does not think the "hard line enforcement look on a peace officer is any longer a primary case for being involved in law enforcement," adds that a peace officer today must be able to understand people, their problems, and underlying problems which often surface as violations of today's laws. He also adds, "The ever increasing demands for educated people in law enforcement organizations is rising rapidly." And taking note from what he believes, Jim is currently enrolled in several college courses, and will complete—sometime in the future—over 600 hours of classroom education designed for today's law enforcement officers. His classes consist of state laws, federal laws, municipal laws, and civil laws in the State of Texas.

Jim Trulove, who came to Shallowater in September of 1973, began immediately to enlarge and upgrade the Police Department. Among his first actions, through the South Plains Association of Governments, was to make application for federal funds to help underwrite his department budget in order to hire additional men. Since then, he has received from SPAG, through the Emergency Employment Act, additional funds to hire one more full-time police officer, in addition to a part-time slot, filled at the present time by Gerald Holmes, Jr., a Texas Tech Law School graduate, who plans to take his exam in the near future; while another grant was received January 15th for the employment of another full-time policeman. The staff, presently three; Chief Trulove, Patrolmen Don Rackler and Gerald Holmes, Jr. will be enlarged to four with the implementation of the new grant as soon as applications can be screened and the Chief can hire an additional patrolman. At the same time that Trulove was enlarging his staff, SPAG grants from federal funds allowed him to gain assistance in crime scene investigation and improve and add police training to his department.

When he first arrived in Shallowater according to Trulove, the worst areas of law enforcement problems for the city were vandalism, thefts, and some NARCOTICS, MARIJUANA & MAYHEM—All part of the story of a busy police chief. Shallowater's police chief, Jim Trulove, displays above some of the strange objects in his enlarging collection of evidence that he started when he took over in September. domestic problems. Since that time however, he feels that the problem of narcotics abuse overshadows the others. As Trulove stated, "We have been successful in slowing down some of our problem areas involving these things (vandalism, thefts, and domestic problems) to a large degree. We are still highly concerned with the incidents and cases dealing with narcotics abuse in our area." As an example, since November of 1973, there have been 15 arrests in the Shallowater area pertaining to narcotics use. Out of these 15 arrests, eleven cases have been filed (all still

STATE CAPITAL
Highlights
AND Sidelights
 by Bill Boykin
 TEXAS PRESS ASSOCIATION

Austin—Texas media groups interested in "freedom of information" met with Attorney General John Hill this week to discuss his opinion that police officers' arrest and offense reports are confidential under an exception to the new Texas open records act.

The quasi-judicial hearing was held because legislative leaders who supported the open records law said it was not their intention to allow police departments to keep arrest and offense reports secret.

Representatives of the Texas Joint Media committee were meeting with their attorneys to prepare statements for Attorney General Hill. Members of the committee include the Texas Press Association, Texas Daily Newspaper Association, Texas Association of Broadcasters, Texas Associated Press Managing Editors, Sigma Delta Chi, American Society of Newspaper Editors and Texas Press Women.

Most police chiefs were leaving their "blotters" open to news people, because they interpreted Hill's opinion as giving them an option on the closing.

Original sponsor of the amendment to the open records law that would close police records was Col. Wilson Speir, director of the Department of Public Safety.

"If this attorney general's opinion holds, and reports of crimes are withheld from the public, the Texas Joint Media Committee representatives will consider amendments to this legislation for the next Texas legislature," stated Glenn Sedam, Texas Press Association vice president and legislative chairman.

Special Session Talked

As the Constitutional Convention rolled along, pretty much on schedule, new pressures started for a special legislative session on school finance during the summer.

Gov. Dolph Briscoe, who has been firm against a special session on comprehensive restructuring of the finance formulas, ordered a day-by-day monitoring of school money problems resulting from inflation and the energy crisis.

Aides said he is giving "serious consideration" to requests for supplementary financial aid before school opens next September.

School administrators and Texas State Teachers Association have requested emergency appropriations of $100 million for school maintenance and operation. Another $40 million is asked to increase teacher retirement payments an average of 10 percent.

Briscoe reportedly is continuing to push for complete data on property tax values in each school district as a basis for long term revision of the finance system.

He may offer a tentative overall plan by November for consideration of the next regular session.

Tickets Don't Count

It's official: speeding tickets picked up during the next 50 days under the new 55 miles per hour speed limit won't count against insurance rates.

Insurance Board Chairman Joe Christie said a moratorium on all speeding convictions as far as insurance rates are concerned has been declared from January 20 through March 20.

A.G. Opinions

Neither the county treasurer nor the county auditor has any responsibility for funds of a legally organized non-profit corporation.

A county is entitled to reimbursement from sureties for reasonable and necessary costs of rearrest after a bond forfeiture or an affidavit of surrender.

The legislature may not by appropriations bill rider require the governor's approval of agency expenditures. A finding by the governor of the existence of a particular fact may be required as a pre-requisite to an expenditure, however.

Appointments

Jim Ray, 32, of Austin was selected as executive director of the Constitutional Convention, with broad powers over the professional staff.

Briscoe named Stephen F. Cross of Borger, district attorney of the 84th district.

Dick Whittington, Texas Water Quality Board deputy director, is a member of a nine-man team selected by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency for a sewage treatment technology conference in Japan next month.

Pedal cars, battery powered vehicles and even wood or charcoal burners are coming back into fashion, according to reports describing the world's reaction to the energy crisis.

cut—about 50 cents in taxes. Then, to finance growth, the average firm keeps half of the remaining 50 cents for capital. So regular stockholders, like you, get the 25 cents that's left. But, if you're a typical investor, you're in the 40 percent tax bracket. So Uncle Sam winds up with 10 cents of your 25-cent dividend, and you wind up with 15 cents. Out of the original $1 of profit, 60 cents goes to Washington."

"Des Moines zoo director Robert Elgin has a roaring good idea," notes an American Mutual Insurance Alliance publication, "on how to discourage vandals. Following a costly incident where vandals sprayed zoo animals with paint and set some species free, Elgin provided the zoo community with a roving watchdog. A lion was allowed to patrol the enclosure after dark."

"I am very much alarmed at the possibility that in the very near future the energy crisis will force the shutdown of businesses, widespread unemployment, and a depression at least as bad as that of the thirties. Once that happens, it will be too late to remove the barriers and allow the utilities to do the things necessary to provide adequate energy."—Mr. George I. Bloom, Chairman, Pennsylvania Public Utility Commission.

According to the National Association of Manufacturers, "Interest on the public debt cost U.S. taxpayers $10.3 billion in 1963. For 1973 they will have to shell out an estimated $23.4 billion."

Arson is growing at a faster rate than other types of fires and even faster than most other crimes, a Stanford Research Institute report warns. Despite a general slackening of violent incidents nationally, arson is occurring at a rate ten times as high as in 1950 and is spreading to the suburbs, wrote Mr. Kendall D. Moll, a socio-economist and author of the report. The study recommended that investigative efforts in connection with arson be tripled, especially in small suburban and rural communities. According to statistics compiled through 1971 but still valid, arson losses account for possibly 30 percent or more of all building losses—greater than all the other costs of violence combined. The number of deliberate burnings had tripled since 1960 and jumped by 13 times since 1950—a tenfold increase when population growth is considered. "The efforts currently being devoted to arson investigations are entirely inadequate to the needs," the report said. Unless arson squads are increased, said the report, "...all areas of the nation will soon be facing an arson problem as serious as the inner cities have confronted during the past five years."

"According to native legend," it is noted in an information sheet entitled "Forest Facts and Features," published by the National Forest Products Association, "mahogany trees that are cut by the light of the moon are sounder, freer of sap, and of a richer color at night. The National Forest Products Association reports this has no basis in fact, but the belief persists."

Battery and pedal powered cars are not new. In fact, some of the first automobiles were battery powered, and a few of these antiques are still owned by collectors. Pedal powered cars and vehicles are, actually, "people power."

If the present energy crisis induces more people to use them, the nation will be healthier.

Lubbock to Host Antique Show Soon

The National Guard Armory will be the site for one of the largest antique shows ever held on the South Plains. Antiquers and antique trades people from all over the nation will gather to participate in the two million dollar event. The show will be open to the public January 25-26-27.

A large amount of furniture will be on display. In addition to the furniture, pottery, art glasses, jewelry, pewter, dolls, indian artifacts and jewelry, paper goods, orientals, cut glass, primitives and books will be on display. Everything will be for sale.

Antiquing has become one of America's favorite past times since world financial experts placed the collecting of fine arts and antiques as being in the top three best financial investment categories.

The show will be managed by George A. Kuehler and Lee Kirkendall of Continental Shows, Ltd., Amarillo, Texas.

Show hours are January 25, Friday, 1 to 10 p.m., January 26, Saturday, 1 to 9 p.m. and Sunday, closing day, 1 to 6 p.m.

Frankly, the longer we travel this road of life, the less we know about it.

November's Elections

This November's elections and others this year will provide a clue as to how badly Republican candidates are handicapped by the Watergate scandal of the past year.

Democrats who assume Watergate will be enough to dislodge Republican office-holders are perhaps overly optimistic. Recent polls have found the average voter disenchanted with the "in" politicians of both parties, however illogical this may seem.

What seems clear is that fresh faces, candidates whose credentials for honesty and integrity are beyond doubt, will have an added asset going for them in elections this year.

It's on the national level that the Republican Party seems likely to suffer most. For even with a new candidate two years hence, Watergate is an albatross around the G.O.P. neck. Governor Reagan and Rockefeller, of California and New York, though not compromised personally, must buck the stigma attached to their party, as must other potential Republican presidential candidates in 1976.

If November's congressional elections are a G.O.P. rout and Democrats emerge with better than two-thirds majorities in both houses of Congress, there could be added pressure on President Nixon (from both parties) to resign, to give the party a new image and to lay Watergate to rest—and to avoid a bitter struggle between the White House and Congress in 1975 and 1976 which could be costly to the nation in many ways.

Congress and Spending

The second session of the 93rd Congress will be judged on its spending record as much as on any other one standard. With this in mind, it should be noted that in its first session the 93rd Congress spent four or five billions more than President Nixon asked it to spend.

The President checked congressional spending in other cases with vetoes or first session spending would have been more. In this election year, with the President still at bay over Watergate scandals, Congress will probably be tempted to spend liberally, even if it means new taxes for the average citizen next year.

The official budget forecast as outlined this month by Budget Director Roy Ash is a $3 to $5 billion deficit in the current fiscal year and a $6 to $8 billion deficit for the 1975 fiscal year. (The current year's deficit would have been higher except for unexpectedly higher revenue collections in recent months.)

With the nation facing an economic slowdown, if not a recession, by the fuel crunch (and Ash doesn't foresee a recession), Congress squarely has a moral responsibility to hold spending within reason. The dollar's stability was only recently saved by two devaluations, which have forced the American consumer to pay more for thousands of imported products. Reckless spending, producing huge budget deficits, will rapidly produce another dollar crisis—and higher taxes. Only responsible action (limited spending) by the second session of this 93rd Congress will avoid that fate.

The Postal Service

In a lead editorial "Reader's Digest" in its January issue warns that proposed postal rate increases will almost certainly bring about the death of much of the magazine industry.

The plight of the magazine industry raises fundamental questions about postal service in America, questions which were not properly addressed when Congress in 1970 abdicated its responsibility to the American people and turned postal service over to a private corporation—so that it could earn a profit.

Moreover, the Postal Service enjoys a monopoly in many areas. In defense of the present service, it should be said that the Postal Reorganization Act of 1970 required that within five years every class of mail pay its own way. That is one reason why the Postal Service recently proposed sharply higher rates, though this hike has been postponed for two months, until March.

The situation as the 93rd Congress convenes is therefore that postal service has not improved since the congressional abdication and that rate increases have already helped kill several major magazines and will surely kill others. As "Reader's Digest" argues, magazines are a seedbed of ideas among the people and a means of educating the masses, and are thus not to be killed off lightly, leaving the job almost entirely to the new television giant, to a large degree controlled by a few cliques in New York and Hollywood entertainment and money circles.

Congress should eventually reacquire the postal service, see to it that it is run as a service to the taxpayers, which means a subsidy to guarantee cheap delivery of printed materials. If the 93rd Congress can't move that quickly, it should enact legislation proposed by Senator Gale McGee (D-Wy.) to slow second class rate increases. In the long postal policy: "I believe that the Postal Service should continue to be what its name and historical role imply—a service to the American people."

Brownsville, Pa., Telegraph: "In three years Saudi Arabia may have greater financial reserves than the United States, Western Europe, and Japan combined. The speaker, a high U.S. official, was underlining the pivotal role played by King Faisal's desert realm in the monetary and energy future of the Western World. 'In 1974', he said, 'Saudi Arabia may earn $15 billion in oil revenues, of which the Saudis can spend only $3 billion on internal development.' At that rate, the official went on, the Saudis by the end of this decade 'may have accumulated $100 billion in reserves,' becoming in a real sense the 'bankers of the world.'"

Bentleville, Pa., Courier: "Speaking of the energy crisis, a friend of mine in Washington, D.C. called attention the other night to what he called the 'second house mania' in this country. He intimated that unoccupied summer and winter second homes in the mountains and at the beaches, often with heat, lights and appliances aging, may be blamed for a part of the energy shortage. The same could be said for second, third and fourth automobiles, cycles, boats, etc., largely idling for no necessary reason."

surprising of all these cases was an incident where two persons alleged to be smoking marijuana were found in front of the city hall building."

Chief Trulove believes that narcotics abuse cannot be blamed on any one culture, social group or race in general. He adds, "I believe that narcotics problems are spread evenly throughout all areas. One of the most primary concerns of narcotics (agents) is the person who begins using drugs as a child or juvenile and keeps getting deeper into the narcotics area by using or selling hard drugs." He continued, "We have found many types of drugs in this area alone, of which only a small overdose could prove to be fatal."

The Police Chief believes that the incidence of drug use in the younger people (age 13 to 24) in the Shallowater area is higher—an average of 1 to 2 narcotics abuse complaints per day at the present time—than in Lubbock or other larger cities in the Southwest area because of the closeness of both RFB and the city of Lubbock. "Apparently", and Trulove comes down hard on the word "apparently", the availability of both Reese and Lubbock makes it much easier for our youngsters to acquire marijuana and drugs. People bringing in marijuana and narcotics to Shallowater fall within the 25 to 35 year-old group at the present time, according to Trulove and his officers, but the users fall in the 13 to 24 year-old group.

Cooperation, from the local citizens and the Department of Public Safety, the Lubbock County Sheriff's Department and the Criminal District Attorney's Office in Lubbock have been what Trulove considers, "Excellent." "Often, investigations would start in our office here in Shallowater, through information we received, and then continue and oftentimes result in drug raids outside Shallowater, in the outlying areas," he added. The DPS alone has been responsible for 4 of the arrests so far according to Trulove. He also likes to add that without special assistance from SPAG, a lot of the improvements he has been working on would not be possible, through federal assisted grants.

As far as future plans are concerned, Trulove says, "I was raised in a small town, similar to Shallowater, and I would like to continue my work here—hopefully improving Shallowater as a place for people to live." He concluded, "I like small communities and I'd like to stay here!"

Events in the first two weeks of the Southwest Conference basketball scramble indicate that the unexpected probably will be the rules. Texas batters TCU by over 50 points and A&M drops favored SMU. So? So, TCU trims the Aggies.

That's the type of stuff that makes the conference unpredictable and one of the big reasons why every road victory is important in the extreme.

So far, the home team has won five of seven times. Only Tech and Texas have won away from home and those are big pluses. Every year it's sad that the team that can win on the road is the team to beat for the championship, and every year it's true.

The Raiders get their second big test when they take on Texas Saturday in Austin. But first, there was the Aggie game Tuesday night. And their loss to TCU didn't help Gerald Myers' frame of mind.

"They have a tough team and that loss will make them even tougher," he said. "They always seem to play well out here."

Indeed, it was A&M that delayed Raider victory celebrations in Lubbock last year, following Tech's win at College Station. "All we did was delay them," Aggie Coach Shelby Metcalf predicted accurately.

However, an Aggie victory Tuesday would more than delay a celebration.

Some of the assistant coaches here to scout Tech and Baylor, along with George Davidson, pretty much agreed that a team with a 10-4 record had an excellent chance to win all the marbles.

"Shoot, 8-6 might win it," Davidson declared. But on one thing all agreed; the conference has better balance and the winner undoubtedly will have more than two losses.

"SMU may be hurt right now over the loss of Hervey," Myers snorted, "but you watch, they'll come back strong."

As for the game against Baylor, Gerald was pleased with the defense. "At least in the second half," he agreed. "Yeah, it probably was our best defensive effort of the year."

Any changes at the half, which found Tech leading, 36-33, but with Baylor in command of the backboards by eight, 23-15. Tech wound up with a 35-31 edge.

"No, maybe the ball wasn't bouncing right for them the second half," Gerald said, "or maybe our fellows just did a little better job. If they had held that first half edge, they might have won."

William Johnson did a tremendous job on Charlie McKinney, who wound up with 12 points, only two the last half. And William canned 15 points, split about 50-50 for the two halves.

Along with that defense, the Raiders shot an amazing 63.6% the first half, then a staggering 70.8% the last half. And, for almost 16 minutes, Tech held the Bears to 17 points. In that period, the Raiders put the victory on ice, pulling steadily away.

When I was an aspiring athlete, I failed to see why a pro in one sport couldn't compete as an amateur in others. The fact that he was a pro in one didn't make him outstanding in another.

Then, typically, I changed my mind and for many years I agreed that pro in one sport, pro in all.

Now I'm back to thinking that the NCAA has done the right thing. If the truth were known, the shoddy treatment accorded the great Jim Thorpe may have caused the change, belated as it is. Thorpe, maybe the greatest all-around athlete of history, was stripped of his Olympic medals because he had once played semi-pro baseball.

That great injustice later was rectified, but too late for the great Thorpe to enjoy it.

It finally was snapped, that great UCLA winning streak, but if you think that the Bruins are going to crumble, forget it. They have a great team, albeit they beat themselves, much to the amazement of basketball fans.

UCLA lost its poise. The Bruins panicked in the final 28 seconds, when they could—and should—have won. Their mistakes cost them a game they had won and they deserved to lose.

It wouldn't be surprising to see UCLA start another streak, although it will be tougher this time. Their loss has given hope to every other team in the nation that has anywhere near comparable material.

Streaks are good for sports. So are defeats that snap them. Even though the two teams play again Saturday night, and the results are radically different, Notre Dame's upset will be talked about for weeks to come. The Bruins finally proved that they are, after all, human.

Tommy Duniven, who has yet to play a varsity down, is being boomed as the heir-apparent to Joe Barnes' quarterback position. And many are predicting great things for him. At the same time, some are worrying that he hasn't had true game experience yet.

Have no fear. Tom Wilson called the majority of plays for Barnes. It's likely that he will do the same for Duniven. So, it comes down to a matter of execution and Duniven appears to have all the equipment necessary to take up the slack immediately.

Farmers and hunters may be scanning the skies with anxiety, hoping to see rain clouds on the scene. You can bet that those canny fellows who like to fish aren't in that group.

The January warmth, and lack of rain, has made lake levels lower. And lower lake levels have made fish get closer together. And togetherness breeds better hauls for fishermen.

South of here, in the Lake Coleman-Hubbard Creek area, fishing is better than a year ago this same time. And some good crappie and black bass catches are being reported.

The vegetation in Oak Creek has subsided, leaving about four feet of clear water—and the bass are responding. Colorado City and Stamford also report good catches, thanks to the power plant outlets that pour hot water into already warmer than normal lakes.

I was talking with Jim Carlen one day about recruiting football players. There's a feeling, in some quarters, that unless a high school player gets newspaper raves, he'll go unnoticed.

"No, sir!" Carlen replied. "We don't pay any attention to newspaper clippings. We go on what we see, what the coaches tell us, what alumni tip us off to, things like that. In the final analysis, we take a boy because we have studied films, seen him in action and talked to his coach. Newspapers don't make prospects for us."

The official announcement January 14 that an open-end yarn spinning plant will be built at Levelland calls for congratulations to the people of Hockley County and their aggressive leadership, says Ray Joe Riley of Hart, President of Lubbock based Plains Cotton Growers, Inc.

Several High Plains towns until January 14 were considered "in the running" as the site of the Japanese-owned yarn forming operation, to be built by Daiwa Spinning Company of Osaka, Japan and operated under the name "Daiwa Texas, Inc."

"PCG has been promoting High Plains type cottons for open-end spinning operations and the High Plains as the site for open-end spinning plants since last year when preliminary studies indicated that High Plains cottons, especially low micronaire, performed well on the relatively new system and produced yarns equal or superior to yarns from premium priced cottons.

"As a 25 county organization," Riley stated, "it was not our place to interfere or take sides in the selection of a plant site by Daiwa, so long as the site was within our High Plains area."

The Levelland Plant is the third such facility to be announced for the High Plains in the past six months. Open-end spinning units in December began replacing conventional ring-spinning frames at the locally owned Southwest Textiles mill in Abernathy, and another open-end spinning plant is scheduled to begin operation in Lubbock late this year. The Lubbock operation, Feather Fabrics Incorporated, will be jointly owned by area investors and the largest integrated textile firm in the Netherlands, Nijverdal-Ten Cate N.V.

"Communities which bid for and failed to acquire the Japanese plant need not be discouraged," Riley continued, "because we anticipate that other mills can and will be built in the area both by local investors and by outside interests."

PCG is embarking on intensified research efforts through the Textile Research Center at Texas Tech University to assure that High Plains cotton stays "out front" as the optimum fiber for open-end spinning, Riley noted.

"Our research will be designed to further refine the use of High Plains cottons on the open-end system to keep High Plains plants happy with our cotton and to put our cotton into open-end spinning operations in other parts of the world."

With regard to textile operations on the Plains, Riley points out that the Federal Rural Development Program, yet to become fully operative, holds considerable promise for local investors to build plants with a minimum of capital. The program is expected to guarantee up to 90 percent of loans on business enterprises in towns of less than 50,000 population.

"We are hopeful that this program will help make it possible for substantial textile activity to move into the High Plains with a high level of local ownership," Riley states, "and it is in this direction that OCG will be working with intensified open-end spinning research and continued monitoring of the Rural Development Program."

Shallowater Bank Reaches Milestone

At the close of business on Friday, January 18th of this year, the First State Bank of Shallowater had reached the $10 million milestone. At that time, bank assets totaled $10,025,937.13, with deposits being $9,294,257.62 and loans totaling $4,804,365.24.

Reasons for the sudden increase in banking deposits and the increase in assets, up more than $1,000,000.00 from the December 31st statement of condition, was the good crops during the 1973 growing season, and the fact that Shallowater, like its bank, is growing on an almost daily basis.

Texas Tech Names Dell City Girl As New Masked Rider at Games

Anne Lynch, who has spent most of her 21 years on a ranch near Dell City in West Texas, has been named the Red Raider for the 1974 football season at Texas Tech University.

A Texas Tech animal business major and a superb horsewoman, Anne already has announced plans which she and the football coaching staff hope will culminate in the Cotton Bowl Jan. 1, 1975.

"Since coming to Texas Tech as a freshman, I have wanted to be the Red Raider. I love Texas Tech and I hope to be the kind of official representative that will reflect favorably on the image of the university as a whole and on its entire sports program," Anne said.

"I have ridden all my life, I like to ride and I know I am as capable of handling an animal like Happy Five as anybody. I am looking forward to the football season and riding the big beautiful quarterhorse which leads the Red Raider football team onto the field prior to each game.

"I want to take care of him, feed him, exercise him, groom him and work with him until we, too, become a team. I have even helped shoe working horses, and with a little help, I am sure I can do the same thing for Happy Five."

Dr. Dale Zinn, chairman of the Animal Science Department, who is responsible for selecting the Red Raider each year, said Anne was chosen by the same criteria upon which selections have always been made.

"The two critical factors are scholarship, with a minimum of a 2.0 grade point average and horsemanship. Other important qualifications," he said, "include reliability, honesty, integrity, and other characteristics on which we place a high priority at Texas Tech."

"Miss Lynch meets all the requirements and we are happy to have her as the official Red Raider for the next football season."

With a grade point above 2.5, Miss Lynch becomes the first woman to be appointed to the prestigious student post. The tradition of the masked Red Raider goes back to the first Gator Bowl engagement in which Texas Tech competed Jan. 1, 1954, when a masked rider, with scarlet and black cape flowing behind him, circled the stadium on a black quarterhorse.

Joe Kirk Fulton, a Lubbock bank executive, was the rider at that game and the colorful tradition has been maintained, becoming one of the most colorful and exciting moments of most of Texas Tech University's football games.

Anne, who knows first hand how to handle a working cowhorse, is the oldest child of the seven of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Lynch who live on the C.L. Ranch five miles from Dell City, 90 miles east of El Paso. The Lynches raise Angus and Charolais cattle commercially.

During her four years at Texas Tech, she has been active in the Texas Tech Rodeo Association, but never has competed in a rodeo. This fall she will be riding Happy Five during his second year of performance at the football games. The 12-year-old gelding, a registered quarter horse, was given to Texas Tech last summer by Scarbauer Cattle Company of Midland for use as the mount for the Red Raider.
