Terri Dixon Member of Texas Tech Basketball Team

The Texas Tech basketball team traveled to Abilene Christian University Thursday to play in their district tournament. They were seeded fifth, but took third place instead. Only the top two teams will continue on to the state tournament. First place went to the Wayland Flying Queens and second to West Texas State.

Terri Dixon, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bobby Joe Reed, and a graduate of Shallowater High School, is a member and starter on the Tech team. She was also one of the four chosen captains for Texas Tech.

While attending Shallowater High, Teri lettered in six varsity sports her senior year, and received several high honors in each sport. She was named All District Guard and was captain of the Shallowater team that year.

Shallowater Couple Return From Visit To Guam

Mr. and Mrs. Granville Igo recently returned from a 15 day trip, visiting their son, George, in Guam.

While there they made a tour of several islands in Micronesia which is between Hawaii and the Philippines. Most of the 2,141 islands of Micronesia were strategic military locations during World War II and rusting tanks, ships and airplanes give much evidence to this fact today, 30 years later.

The major islands of this beautiful Pacific paradise are linked with civilization via Continental Air to Micronesia for whom the Igo's son George is regional supervisor.

The Igo's report a very enjoyable trip of sightseeing while there and also reported a beautiful amount of rain fell during the 15 days they were on the islands.

The second of two public hearings to solicit citizen input into the city's plan to apply for $148,000 in Housing and Urban Development money to construct a 100,000 gallon water tower was held Monday night in the Shallowater city hall.

"We feel at this time overhead storage is a great priority need for Shallowater," Tony Plumlee, a consulting engineer for Willis Environmental Engineering, told the 20 people attending the hearing.

"At this time, we're 85,000 (gallons) low."

Plumlee told those attending the hearing that he thought the water tank would drop the key rate residents pay for fire insurance, and help the fire department.

The city will take the results of the two public hearings before the South Plains Association of Governments (SPAG) next Tuesday for approval before submitting a formal application to HUD. If the application is approved, work on the project would begin during the summer.

"On elevated storage we're still talking about six months away before we even start," Plumlee said.

Currently Shallowater is competing with Idalou, New Deal, and Slaton for part of the $433,000 HUD has provided Lubbock County.

Should the city not receive the full request, money to construct the tank will be taken from a $300,000 bond issue which voters passed in November 1974 to construct water and sewer lines and a ground reservoir, Plumlee explained.

Construction of the 350,000 ground reservoir is awaiting Farmer Home Administration approval of the bond issue and a Texas Railroad Commission grant of easement for a water line along railroad property, mayor Jack Dulaney said.

In an interview with the Suburban Today, the mayor said the city currently has "half-enough" water because of population growth.

"The storage has lasted until we had 1200 people. We're up to 1800," he said.

On the issue of fire insurance, the mayor said he did not think the key rate would drop "any big amount."

"We're in a real good position with what we've had. We're just as low as anybody," he said.

"If we don't get this, we are liable to have it raised," he added.

The city intends to build the water tank in the northeast part of town.

Ramblings with Dardie

Thoughtfulness for one another is a trait instilled in all of us, but so many times, we either find ourselves too busy and involved in different things that we just never get around to that special thought we would like to extend to someone else.

The gang at the local Post Office (who can never find the time for a coffee break anymore due to a shortage in help) was thought of in such a lovely way last week, when Mrs. Jean Holt, manager of the Shallowater Restaurant, took time out from her busy schedule to bring three cups of hot coffee to the post office for Milton, Barbara and myself.

Besides enjoying the coffee, the thought of Jean taking her time to think of us was so nice and made us realize how truly great it is to live in a community such as Shallowater, and have such nice people to call our friends. If you haven't met Jean, you've missed a blessing, as she is just one of the nicest, friendliest people you will meet anywhere and always has a smile and a hello for you.

Thanks for the coffee Jean, we enjoyed it so much. In fact many people have expressed their concern for the post office gang lately, including Mrs. Oleta Sandlin who is employed at the local cafe and has stated how much she misses us coming over for our regular morning coffee break. We miss it too, Oleta.

No man is free unless he knows the truth.

SPORTS

by Joe Kelly

Well, sire, the Southwest Conference fathers withstood the pressures and reaffirmed their first pronouncement—two Texas A&M players were recruited illegally and were suspended.

The general betting was that there would be a whitewash and no action would be taken. Instead, the conference followed the dictate of the courts, held a hearing with players and witnesses present and then stood by their original statement.

Karl Godine and Jarvis Williams are suspended for the playoffs and for one additional season, which means that they have two years of eligibility left—if they stay at Aggieland.

No other punishment was applied. The Aggies were not forced to forfeit any games in which the players appeared. There was no probation. The Aggies may appear on TV. At first glance, it would appear that, for the infractions, A&M got off pretty easy.

True. But if you buy that, you're overlooking one thing. The conference turned its information over to the NCAA, which can review, investigate further, impose stiffer penalties or take any action it deems necessary.

What the conference did, in essence, is to say that we found A&M guilty, which is the important thing. The league is vindicated in its action. Now, you take the ball, NCAA, and run with it. That takes the heat off the conference.

Writers from Houston here for the Houston and Rice basketball games are convinced that, before it's all over, the NCAA will dig into the overall A&M program and that the whole story will come out. And, they say, when it does, it won't be pretty.

Many conferences have done the same as the SWC, imposed minor penalties and left the harsher action up to the NCAA. The NCAA has more power and authority.

One of the most asked questions is, why the delay in SWC action? Leon Black of Texas turned the information over to the conference in September, but it's five months before any action is taken.

The answer is simple. The action wasn't taken through the courts, there was no supponea powers and the investigating agency had to come by the answers through hard digging. And that takes time. Apparently the agency got the answers in the long run.

The finals of the SWC basketball tournament are coming up and there are some good games on tap. SMU and Arkansas ought to be a real barn burner, while Texas Tech and Houston also is a top attraction. Moody Coliseum should be filled.

The first round games were a financial flop. The crowds, as expected, were non-existent. People stayed home in droves, although the Houston-Baylor game was a topnotch attraction.

Rick Bullock deserved better from Tech fans and students than the meager turnout on "Rick Bullock Day." The big center has been terrific for four years and the ovation, from 3,602 fans, was great, but it should have been 10,000 fans.

With all due respect to the supporting cast of players, Bullock has been the key since he's been at Tech. He's been the spark and he will be sorely missed.

*****

Despite what the stories said, Leon Black stepped down because he courageously, and honestly, blew the whistle on A&M. He is to be lauded for his courage.

Black has, overall, done a good job at Texas. The former Longhorn guard won a couple of championships and, in the process, developed a lot of good players. And, with a new facility coming up, it's a shame that he won't be around to enjoy it.

*****

Pro athletes are getting some bad advice and you wonder how much longer they are going to listen. It's gotten to the point where sports for sport's sake is gone. The sports field is big business, especially when Organized Labor enters the picture.

Okay, so athletes join a union. They can expect from business the same treatment awarded to any labor union: No contract, no work. It's a sad note.

The owners say okay, you want an agreement, a contract, fine, sign here. Labor (baseball players) answer that they don't like the terms—but they want to go to spring training.

The owners won't open the camps, which are essential for the players. They say that without a written agreement, there won't be any spring training. You went to the courts to get the reserve clause removed. Okay, now come up with a workable alternative.

The general public, which doesn't give a tinker's dam about reserve clauses, contracts, agreements or anything else, is fed up. Let's get on with the action, it said.

The breakthrough has come, however. No longer are football, basketball, golf, baseball or any other sport purely sports. They are big business, dependent on the public, sponsors, owners. Something is going to have to snap. When it does, the public may well be the big loser.
