Clarendon is three years oid; the national census completed last spring, gave the town a population of nine hundred and seventy people at that time; fully two hundred and fifty more have been added to this number since then, and Clarendon has a population of over twelve hundred now. This is the terminus of the freight and passenger divisions of the Fort Worth and Denver R'y, and the company maintains extensive machine and car re pair shops here. Donley county, of which Clarendon is the county seat, lies at the foot of the staked plains; Clarendon is within less than two miles of the geographical center of the county, and is two thousand and seven kundred feet above sea level and is in the same latitude of Fort Smith. Arkansas. The soil is of great depth and fertility; matures vegetables and fruits to perfection; is unsurpassed for wheat, oats, rye, barley, millet, Johnson grass, sorghum, milo maize, and other forage crops; corn does as well here as elsewhere in Texas. Plenty of pure, soft freestone water everywhere by digging from twenty to one hundred feet; many fine springs and living streams in the county; but little timber; surface rolling and more or less broken, but fully two-thirds of the land susceptable of a high state of cultivation; settlers locating on these lands and establishing homes every day.

The payment of the principal, after the first, may be postponed until the fortieth year. This system gives the poor man with limited means an opportunity to secure a home and meet the payments without any inconvenience whatever. These lands are largely agricultural and very productive, under proper cultivation, and the homeseeker has large bodies of rich valley and high prairie lands from which so make his selection. There is no other County in Texas to-day that can offer to the actnal settler such inducements as Donley county holds out. These lands are in the healthiest portion of the state, a country free from malarial fevers and agues, a climate unsurpassed anywhere, and its population, though rather sparse at present, of the very best class of people.
