The U. S. Senate Race In A Nut Shell

The following editorial appeared in the June 13th issue of the Anton News. It exactly expresses our views, so we are hereby republishing it.

Now that the race for the U. S. Senate is coming into the home stretch, how are the candidates showing up and what claims do they offer the sovereign voters to obtain their votes?

W. Lee O'Daniel, governor of Texas is probably the leading candidate, although he will fall far short of his usual majority. He has lost much of his popularity from one cause or another, many of his strong supporters have quit him because of his inability to get along with the legislature and other State officials. The Governor's attitude that every body but himself is a crooked politician has filled lots of people with disgust. His recent threat to call the roll when he gets to Washington and defeat everybody who refuses to take his leadership was utterly foolish and cost him many many votes! His strongest appeal is his personality. You can pay no attention to his promises.

He'd promise to move the moon if he thought it good campaign tactics to do so. But the thing that is going to cost O'Daniel the most votes is the fact that the old people of the state will have $9 per month cut from their pension checks all through the summer. O'Daniel and the legislature can not agree (same Old story); the old people have to pay, as usual.

Martin Dies has a strong following over the state. His popularity lies about his fight against perverse groups and un-Americanism. Texas has never produced a more conscientious or a cleaner public official than Martin Dies. He is too honest to take money from the plunderbund to make the race with, and is therefore handicapped. His one issue is not a sufficient appeal to elect him. Many of his friends feel that he, as a member of the powerful Rules Committee, can do more good there than he could in the Senate.

Sam Morris will be among the big five when the votes are counted. He is running on Morris Sheppard's old platform—prohibition. He is asking for the right to take up where Sheppard left off. But again a one plank platform is not broad enough to go to the Senate on. Texas wants more than a one-idea senator.

Lyndon Johnson is making noise and spending more money than any man in the race except O'Daniel (who is spending thousands of dollars). Johnson is a progressive young congressman. But after all has been said for him, strip him of his "Roosevelt and Unity" plank, based on a vague endorsement from the President, and he'd get nowhere. Personally, we would have felt much better toward Mr. Johnson if he had made the race on his own merits and told us he was a full grown man and could stand alone. We Texans do not cherish the idea of an outsider, even the president, trying to tell us how to vote. We want a senator to represent US.

The next candidate on the list is the Attorney General Gerald Mann. Mann is just the type of man for whom Texans like to vote, and as it happens he is just the type of man to make Texas a senator who would rank with the great men who have represented Texas in the past. He worked his way through college and law school. He sprang into prominence in politics when he defeated one of the state's most popular men who have served the state in the past. The governor tried to defeat Mann, but he was too great a statesman to hold a grudge. He fell right in and worked with the governor. Forty-five times the governor went to him on the constitutionality of laws; forty-five times he gave that advice; not once did he dodge the issue; forty five times his advice was taken. He has stood like a stone wall of defense for the people and if all the bogus laws that Mann has ruled out were compiled they would make a text book of tyranny. In his office is a motto which says "I sacrificed no principle to gain this office—I shall sacrifice none to keep it." So great was his record as attorney general, that when the office of Chief Justice of the Supreme Court became vacant, the Governor offered the appointment to Mann. It looks like Mann's the man.
