By popular request (at least 2) we are again sitting at the typewriter punching out a few paragraphs to go under the heading of "Off Side" which by a stretch of the imagination might be called a newspaper column.

Coach Stephenson was in town one day this week. One of the boys was heard to make the remark that they really would have to look up to him.

Here is hoping the new coach can come up with some real teams this year.

Information has come to the writer that when Steve took over the football team at Miles in the middle of the season last year they had lost every game played, but won all games after then. Sounds good.

Am I peeved? One morning last week the better half was busily engaged in baking a pineapple cake, and I thought to myself, "Boy, won't that be fine eating," but lo, and behold, not a bite did I get. She said it was for the boys at Charlie Guy's loud speaker, better known as KFYO. Old Mac had been begging for a cake to go with his morning coffee for about two weeks. He's a delicate little fellow, and evidently aroused her sympathies.

Wonder what has happened to all the salesmen in the Service Station business. I drove several hundred miles over the week end, stopping at a dozen or more service stations, and just 1 of them even offered to check the oil in our old Ford Jitney. That one happened to be the boys at Bob's Oil Well in Matador.

If you have ever stopped at Bob's place you have certainly noticed the zoo he has there. He has every thing from rattle snakes to buffalo, and porcupine to African lion.

When we go fishing our friends expect us to come back with a big fish story.

The President did more than that. He sent home a whale of a story. His three day interview with Churchill and other high ranking British officials has brought forth both favorable and bitter comments from members of Congress.

Senator Connally praised the eight point agreement. Senator O'Daniel wanted to study the document before commenting.

RECRUITS FROM OVER JORDAN

The Free French forces that lately, with the British, defeated the Vichy government's troops in Syria, were reinforced by these tough Circassians, who rode many miles over high mountain ranges and finally swam the Jordan before reaching the Allied lines. Their regiment was raised by Colonel Phillibert Collet, as famous among the Syrians as Lawrence among the desert Arabs. Colonel Collet could not stand the sight of Syria being converted into a Nazi base for use against France's former Allies, and led his men into Palestine, whence he launched a stirring appeal to the French Army of the Levant, not to allow itself to be made the tool of the enemy.

The Faith of a Queen

Breastfast in the faith of her forefathers, Queen Wilhelmina of the Netherlands stands amid the war-shattered ruins of the Dutch Church where Hollanders in London have worshipped for centuries. Mainly on religious grounds, the Queen's government has never recognized the Soviets, yet she recently took her place beside the other Allies in welcoming Russia as a fellow-fighter against the one great menace—Nazi Germany. With her is her son-in-law, Prince Bernhard, himself a German by birth, who has just been visiting the United States and telling Americans of the part Holland is playing in the Allied struggle for freedom.

In this picture, typical of any of the air training schools in Canada, are seen (left to right) student airmen from Canada, Australia and New Zealand. They are enrolled in the British Commonwealth Air Training Plan, the most gigantic enterprise of its kind in the world. It is now turning out thousands of pilots, gunners and observers at about twice the rate originally planned for this time. The plan now has 116 establishments of all kinds including 83 schools from coast to coast. Its estimated cost for a period of three years is $824,000,000 of which amount Canada will provide $531,000,000 and also 80 per cent of the students. About 1,500 of the pupils trained or in training with the Royal Canadian Air Force are Americans and 600 American pilots are serving as instructors for the Air Training Plan. In addition to sending men overseas, the R.C.A.F., with planes on patrol duty throughout the Dominion and far out to sea on both coasts daily, is a powerful factor in Canada-United States Defense.
