Lamesa, Tex.—A new automatic seed cotton module gin feeder is "working like a charm" in shakedown runs at the Mesa gin here, Fred Abel, associate director of agricultural research for Cotton Incorporated, reports.

The new machine increases ginning rates by some 25 per cent, Abel said, and "eliminates the nastiest job in the cotton business, the suction pipe operator."

The feeder was developed in research sponsored by cotton producers through Cotton Incorporated at the Texas Agricultural Experiment Station.

Abel said the new machine feeds seed cotton directly into the suction pipe system automatically, constantly and uniformly. The cotton is fluffier and does not enter the gin in wads, as it does when a suction pipe operator lifts cotton from conventional trailers.

Jerry Harris, Mesa gin manager, agrees. "The cotton is better prepared and is more readily cleaned in the overhead," he said. "Our gin ordinarily runs 10-12 bales an hour. In one test run with the gin feeder, we applied a stop watch and measured a rate of 15 bales an hour."

Harris said the key to increasing the ginning rate is the consistent rate at which the feeder conveys cotton into the gin. "The feeder does not run real fast, then slow down, the way a suction pipe operator does. It just keeps on feeding at the same, consistent, near capacity rate. All you do is set the rate, push the button, and let it run."

The gin feeder is the latest step in a new system developed by Cotton Incorporated to mechanize the handling of seed cotton from harvesting through ginning. It must be used in conjunction with the cotton module builder, the basic machine in the new system.

As cotton is harvested, the module builder compacts it into free standing modules, or stacks, on pallets. The module, containing 8-12 bales, moves through the system intact. The module can be stored, retrieved, loaded, transported, unloaded, reloaded and moved again, all in one piece. Finally the module is conveyed automatically into the gin feeder, which breaks up the stack and moves the cotton on into the gin.

While the module builder itself was designed primarily for use in rainbelt areas, it is now winning quick acceptance in arid areas such as the High Plains of Texas, where the most popular method of storing seed cotton in recent years has employed the turnrow rick compactor.

"Even in areas where the cotton rick compactor works fine, the module system will allow gins to enjoy all the benefits of the new automatic gin feeder," said Abel.

Again, Jerry Harris agrees. "We are making extensive use of the module builder this year to stack ricked cotton into modules that can be fed automatically into the gin," he said. "Next year we'll probably go to the module builder and gin feeder system 100 per cent."

In areas where the module builder is used alone, the gin feeder is a logical extension of the system, Abel said. It allows gins to handle more cotton without adding capacity, and it practically eliminates most labor problems.

Harris also pointed out that the gin feeder uses standard parts and belts. "Most any gin can be modified very easily to accommodate it," he said.

Abel said Sawyer Engineering of Temple, Texas, made the prototype unit now in use at the Mesa gin and will manufacture commercial models for delivery this year.

Mrs. Terrell was a featured speaker. Construction on the $1.375 million Center is getting underway on a scenic 78-acre site adjacent to Lake Brownwood. T. What Is The FHA?

by Karen Skolaut

When someone mentions the Future Homemakers of America to you, what sort of picture comes to mind? If you are like most people, you probably think of an organization for girls who spend their time improving on the art of homemaking. And if your concept of the FHA is limited to the sewing, cooking, laundry idea—read on, you've got something to learn.

Founded June 11, 1945, FHA's membership has grown steadily from 92,516 at the end of the first year to today's membership of half-a-million men and women. There are affiliated associations in 49 states, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands and in American schools overseas.

Future Homemakers of America was established as an education orientated organization. Operationally, the organization is set up on three levels—national, state and local.

Any student enrolled in or who has taken home economics or a home economics related occupations subject is eligible to join. The local chapter is the basic unit of the organization. Chapter officers are elected by the membership and chapter dues are set by each individual chapter.

In 1971 two types of chapters were established in order to provide for those students enrolled in home economics related occupations courses.

The FHA Chapters place major emphasis on consumer education, homemaking and family life education combined with exploration of jobs and careers.

The HERO Chapters place major emphasis on preparation for jobs and careers with recognition that workers also fill multiple roles as homemakers and community leaders.

The overall goal of the organization is: To help youth assume their roles in society through home economics education in areas of personal growth, family life, vocational preparation and community involvement.

Even a glance at some of the projects FHA and HERO members are involved with is proof enough that they are meeting this goal. Projects are concerned with ecology, training of younger children, working with the elderly, helping the underprivileged and handicapped, promoting understanding between youth and adults, digging into career and job opportunities and others based on youth's concern.

Future Homemakers of America is self-supporting and National Headquarters are located in Washington, D.C. Nationwide in membership and effort, FHA is co-sponsored by the U.S. Office of Education through the Division of Vocational and Technical Education and The American Home Economics Association.

This week, March 31st through April 6th, is designated as National FHA-HERO Week. Chapters across the country will hold special observances and carry out activities and projects related to this year's theme: Impact '74.

The next time you hear about the Future Homemakers of America, remember, it involves both men and women who are vitally concerned with not only home economics but home economics careers and related occupations.

Have You A Sod House Heritage?

Did you ever live in a sod house, a dugout, or an adobe building; or were you born in one? Did you ever teach school, attend school or church services in such a building, or help build one? Or are you a child or perhaps a grandchild of a former pioneer sod house dweller or builder?

If you can answer "yes" to any of these questions, the Sod House Society of America, with headquarters at Colby, Kansas, would like to hear from you. The unique society is making a survey and census of people who have had any kind of personal experience with sod structures, including descendants of such persons. Sod houses, dugouts, part sod, and adobe buildings were once common in the United States, Canada, and Mexico.

All former sod dwellers and descendants of a family that can claim a part of the sod house heritage during the pioneer settlement era of North America, or in more recent times, will be listed by the society in a permanent historical record of sod, dugout, and adobe dwellers and their families. Sod buildings in some form were used in well over half the North American continent.

To make this survey a success, information is needed from people in all parts of North America. If you have any information concerning present or former sod dwellers, a report of this will be most welcome. Please tell where the buildings were located, and give family names, as well as your own. Reports should be sent to: Sod House Survey of Texas, Colby, Kansas 67701.

SPORTS

by Joe Kelly

Two weeks ago this next Saturday I spent most of the day until almost dark on Canyon Lake, hoping to stir up bass, walleyes and/or crappie. About all I got for my troubles was sunburn.

It was a hot day, 85 degrees, and the wind steadily increased in velocity during the day. By late afternoon it was getting uncomfortably cool to sit around in a Tee shirt and shorts. We didn't know it at the time, but a front was moving through.

Generally, a front will stir the fish into biting activity. It wasn't the case this time. Other fishermen reported no luck at all, which made our two bass, three crappie string, look better.

The five fish were all caught on minnows in fairly shallow water in brush next to dead trees. Nothing else aroused bites. We gave them a complete variety—surface lures, deep lures, spinners, plastic worms, jigs, spoons, feathered hooks.

Undaunted by the day's failure, we—son-in-law, his parents, grandson—intended to go back Sunday. That night tv said that it would be windy, cold, rainy on Sunday. We looked at each other and heads began shaking. Sure nuff, Sunday was all that and more.

All of which isn't to knock Canyon Lake. It's a big, beautiful body of water with some 80 miles of shoreline. There's a lot of brush in it and it is growing in fishing popularity now.

For a long time Canyon Lake rated low on the scale of popularity because there seemed to be no bass of consequence in it. Experts said that it was because there were no spawning beds available.

Efforts were made to correct this situation and walleyes were added to the lake. Now there are big bass in the lake, and the marinas have pictures to prove it. If you could spend a lot of time on Canyon and get to know it, I imagine the fishing would be great.

A San Antonio paper that Sunday had an unusual story, with picture to prove it. An angler caught an eight-inch bass. As he was bringing it to the boat, another bass struck and the fight was on. When he finally netted his catch, the fisherman was rewarded with a seven and a half pound bass!

Moral: Sometimes we use bait that is too small, but don't expect this to happen all the time, maybe not once in a million.

As a result of the fishing trip, I missed the UCLA-NC State "dream" game. It must have been all that had been expected. As for the finals Monday night, I thought it was a poorly played game.

There were flashes of brilliance by both State and Marquette, but there were far too many turnovers. The NIT final game was much better played and more exciting. It was unfortunate, because the NCAA does have the best teams in the nation competing.

Bob Galt, Dallas Times-Herald sports writer, had an interesting study recently. The most significant thing, locally, is that Tech was the only conference school to support itself in basketball. Galt says Tech cleared $60,000 on the cage program.

At the same time, Arkansas lost $100,000 and Texas dropped nearly $90,000. Everyone else, including hot spots like Houston and SMU, lost money, putting more strain on football, the lone revenue producing sport.

The reason for Galt's article was, of course, the shock that was felt when Texas announced that it would have to have outside financial support after losing $92,871 on sports last year.

Galt found that Arkansas, A&M, Baylor and Tech had made money—and in that order—because of outside contributions. Arkansas raised half a million; A&M $220,000; Baylor $200,000; and Tech, $175,000.

Indeed, Texas is said to have spent $10,000 more on football recruiting this year, although scholarships were more restricted.

The study illustrates the plight that our colleges and universities find themselves in today. Costs have gone steadily up and, as the sports programs have spread out, the expense is enormous.

It wasn't too many years ago that some New Mexico enthusiasts asked the late Dell Morgan what they could do to help Burl Huffman, then football coach at the Albuquerque school.

"Give him $25,000 for recruiting," Dell replied.

The New Mexico people were shocked. "Where," they asked, "are we going to get that kind of money?" Raise it, Dell suggested.

Today, $25,000 would hardly recruit a starting backfield—legally.

Spring football training has started at Tech and there's reason for optimism, if the Raiders can avoid the bugaboo of injuries. An injury-free spring, in view of the large number of players, is almost a necessity.

So far, most stories about Tech spring football have emphasized the losses. Granted, they were big, but there is a large number of replacements with more potential than the players lost.

If the newcomers progress satisfactorily, Tech could have a bigger, more versatile team than the 11-1 team or last year. There's a smattering of experience plus what Jim Carlen says is the best coaching staff in the country.

The combination, with four uninterrupted weeks of work, could be the catalyst for a championship team next fall. Certainly the attitude of this squad should be superior, because Tech still hasn't won a conference title and that is the No. 1 goal.

The baseball season starts today and it really has sneaked up on me, although I've been reading the summaries on the teams. If form is any guide, it could be another zany season.

There are new managers at several spots. There have been a number of trades. Hank Aaron needs two homers to be the all-time champ. And we still have Charley Finely with us.

St. Louis can't get off to such a miserable start two years in a row, so I like the Cards, the Oakland Athletics, the Baltimore Orioles and the New York Mets to be divisional champs.

The Roundup—Former Raider end Frank Ottmer has a son who will probably be a starting tight end at Rice this year. . . . And brother Wallace (Fredericksburg) has a son who was all-district as a junior,
