

Latino Leaders, Journalists See Immigration Legislation as Likely but Without True Reform

By Charlie Erickson

Will President Bush and Congress team to produce immigration legislation this year? If so, will it include a guest-worker program or a path for undocumented immigrants to legalize their status?

Hispanic organizational leaders and Latino journalists who cover the community and national scene agree: Yes, maybe, and a frustrated, exasperate, "No way!"

They also agree that Bush and Congress do a good imitation of Scrooge when it comes to addressing Hispanic community needs.

Fifty Latino organizational leaders and journalists responded to a Hispanic Link survey soliciting their views. Of the 50, 37 expect an immigration bill will pass Congress and be signed by President Bush. Twenty-four expect it to include a guest-worker program. Just six think it will offer a path to legalization.

While most anticipate the House and Senate will concur on some type of legislation, few believe it will come close to resolving the nation's immigration mess.

National Association of Hispanic Publications president Lupita Colmenero, publisher of El Hispano News in Dallas, expressed their most common fear:

"Any reform without a path to legalized workers will not solve any problem. The question is if Congress is willing to understand this reality and deal with it."

A number of respondents mentioned the need for it to include greater economic development opportunities, both here at home and to help feeder countries, particularly Mexico, get on their feet so they can better address immigration's "push" factor.

Juan Esparza Loera, publisher of Vida en el Valle in Fresno, Calif., added that the legislative package should include the proposed "Dream Act" to allow students from undocumented families to attend college at in-state tuition rates.

Asked to grade President Bush, the Congress and national Hispanic organizations on their sensitivity to and advocacy for the Latino community, those polled responded:

	A	B	C	D	F
Bush	1	3	12	18	16
Congress	0	1	11	26	12
Latino orgs.	3	20	18	8	0

Dionicio Morales, 86-year-old founder of the Mexican American Opportunity Foundation in California, is still active with the community service provider he built from scratch. With early recognition from President Lyndon Johnson during the War on Poverty and strong corporate support in years to follow, MAOF operates today with an annual budget of nearly $60 million.

Working with Congress and the White House "was simpler back then," he says, noting that the nation's Hispanic population is growing and changing so fast, even its own institutions are having trouble relating to it. "Racism is still here," but younger generations of Hispanics are more into themselves than into advocacy for civic and social reform and it's reflected in Latino organizations, he says.

Julio Barreto Jr., development director of the National Association of Housing and Redevelopment Officials, adds the element, "Too many Hispanics are so tied to either political party, they tend to represent Hispanic interests from that party's perspective instead of what's best for the community."

Survey respondents were requested to rank the three most important issues confronting Hispanics today. This brought a wide range of replies, from crime to housing to poverty.

But the four concerns mentioned most were education (41 times), immigration (28 times), health care (17 times), and employment (14 times).

Jane Delgado, president of the Washington-based National Alliance for Hispanic Health, listed health as her top priority, followed by "how we handle power." She counseled, "Sheer numbers are not enough. Hispanics need to be inclusive of others."

Threaded throughout the respondents' comments was empathy for the estimated 11 million undocumented immigrants lured here by the promise of improving their families' chances to live a decent life. Their tortured existence, some respondents suggested, is the product of the ineptitude and callousness of U.S. and foreign political leadership.

Frank Gómez, a former corporate executive now with LatinInsights, a New York research firm, summed it all up, "Few key members of Congress display the courage and humanity necessary to deal with immigration. Our Hispanic organizations, while generally good, lack the fire and spirit of the old days. They lack the passion of the civil rights era. We need a united voice that has real weight in policymaking, perhaps because we are too divided."

Dionicio Morales, de 86 años y fundador de la Mexican American Opportunity Foundation (MAOF) en California, continua activo con la organización que fundó. Habiendo recibido en los primeros años reconocimiento del presidente Lyndon Johnson durante la Guerra sobre la Pobreza y con fuerte apoyo empresarial en los años siguientes, MAOF opera hoy con un presupuesto anual de $60 millones.

La colaboración con el Congreso y la Casa Blanca "era más sencilla en ese entonces", comenta, notando que la población hispana de la nación está creciendo y cambiando de manera tan rápida que hasta sus propias instituciones tienen problemas para mantener una relación con ella. "Existe todavía el racismo", pero las generaciones menores de hispanos son más auto-referentes que luchadores por las reformas cívicas y sociales y esto se refleja en las organizaciones latinas, explica.

Julio Barreto Jr., director de desarrollo de la National Association of Housing and Redevelopment Officials, añade otro elemento, "Tantos hispanos se ven vinculados con uno u otro partido político que tienden a representar los intereses de los hispanos desde la perspectiva de su partido, y no desde lo que mejor sirve a la comunidad".

La encuesta pidió la categorización de los tres temas de mayor importancia que enfrentan los hispanos hoy, lo cual suscitó una gran variedad de respuestas, desde el crimen hasta la vivienda y la pobreza.

Sin embargo, los cuatro temas más mencionados fueron la educación (41 veces), la inmigración (28 veces), la salud (17 veces) y el empleo (14 veces).

Jane Delgado, presidenta de la Alianza Nacional para la Salud Hispana, con base en Washington, D.C., indicó que su prioridad es la salud, seguida de "cómo manejamos el poder". Aconsejó, "Los meros números no son lo suficiente. Los hispanos tienen que incluir a otros".

Como hilo entre los comentarios de los encuestados se encuentra la empatía por la condición de los estimados 11 millones de inmigrantes indocumentados atraídos por la promesa de mejorar las oportunidades de sus familias para vivir una vida decente y cuya existencia torturada, sugieren algunos, es producto de la ineptitud y falta de compasión del liderazgo estadounidense y extranjero.

Frank Gómez, anterior ejecutivo de empresa, ahora con LatinInsights, una empresa de investigación en Nueva York, resumió todo, "Unos pocos miembros claves del Congreso muestran el valor y la humanidad necesarios para tratar el tema de la inmigración. Nuestras organizaciones hispanas, si bien buenas por lo general, carecen del fuego y el espíritu de antaño. Carecen de la pasión del era de los derechos civiles. Nos hace falta una voz unida que tenga verdadero peso en la formulación de políticas, tal vez por lo que estamos demasiado divididos".

Looking Back Provides Hope for Future

By Abel Cruz

As we ring out the old and embark on the New Year, two things naturally happen. On the one hand we look back on the year that was with mixed emotions; either with gratefulness for what we accomplished or thankful that the year is over.

On the other hand, we look forward to the new one filled with hope for a new beginning, with resolve to make the new one, the one that will bring us prosperity and fulfill our every wish.

Being a realist, I tend to look back in a reflective mode more so than I look forward. I suppose that comes from so many years of making resolutions and breaking them before the second week of January rolls around.

Looking backwards is not all bad though. It gives us an opportunity to reflect on our wins and losses. It allows us to learn from what we did right and what we did wrong. It teaches us to have a more realistic vision of where we want to go, of the road we will take.

Over the past year, I have written this weekly column in hopes that I might share my view of things that I hope matter to most of us. At times I have succeeded, at other times I have failed miserably. Never the less, I tried. In 2006 I will continue to try.

When I review the topics that I covered in this space, nothing stands out more than the very people who helped inspire them. The people who give of their time in service to this community as an elected official or civic volunteer, or just someone who cares enough to give of their time and get involved; they provided much to discuss. The others, Lubbock citizens who also gave of their time, got involved in the issues, took a stand on principles; they provided even more inspiration.

For us who happen to live in the greatest country in the world, the world gave much to think about; from war and all its horrible consequences to deadly natural disasters to the passing of a religious leader unlike some of us have seen in modern times.

There were other things that were not so pleasant to bear witness to: an ugly national political landscape, American citizens dying right before our eyes in New Orleans, the reality of poverty like we had never witnessed it before.

If it seems to you that I tend to focus on the glass being half empty rather than half full, there is a reason. I believe that we learn more from the things that go wrong than from the things that go right. It is the adversity that we face in our lives that continuously forms our vision and hopefully inspires us to do better. If things are going right, we can be grateful, but realistically we know that many challenges lie ahead. Adversity prepares us for those challenges.

In the grand scheme of things though, I must admit that all these things that we witnessed, give me hope. I like to think that it does the same for you our reader.

It gives me hope because we have survived them and hopefully we are working to make things better.

It is when we cease to have hope, that we may as well raise the white flag.

As we continue to face these challenges I hope that we can remember that we are only a small part of the total sum and that all of us can contribute in our own way for the good of all.

If we come to the end of 2006, and can all look back and say that we did just a little better than the year before; then we will have realized success.

Here's a toast to you the reader. At the end of the day, I could not do what I do without you. May the New Year bring us all what ever it is we hope for.

"BOSSES SLASH WAGES, GRAB BONUSES"

Robert Miller is a "corporate turnaround specialist," but his specialty really amounts to nothing more than whacking blue-collar workers.

Miller was brought in as CEO of Delphi Corporation last July in the wake of an accounting scandal by various top executives — a scandal that helped bring the corporation to the brink of bankruptcy. After only three months at the helm of Delphi, the nation's largest maker of auto components, Miller announced his corporate makeover plan: declare bankruptcy, slash the wages of blue-collar workers by two-thirds, end health care for retirees, and move more of Delphi's work offshore. Everyone must sacrifice, he sternly told workers.

Everyone? Not those at the top. To the contrary, the day before announcing his plan, Miller quietly set up a $110 million bonus package for the 21 top executives working under him, even though 14 of them had been complicitous in the accounting fraud!

When exposed, this gob of greed caused such an uproar that Miller had to rush out and announce that, well, gosh, he and the other execs now wanted to share the workers' pain. Delphi's number two honcho would take a 20-percent cut in salary he said, and the 20 other top dogs would take a 10-percent cut. Also, by gollies, Miller said he was cutting his own pay to $1 a year. This reborn working class hero then appealed to the workers' sympathy with this sob story: "I can be fired tomorrow with no severance, no pension, no bonus, not even a ticket home."

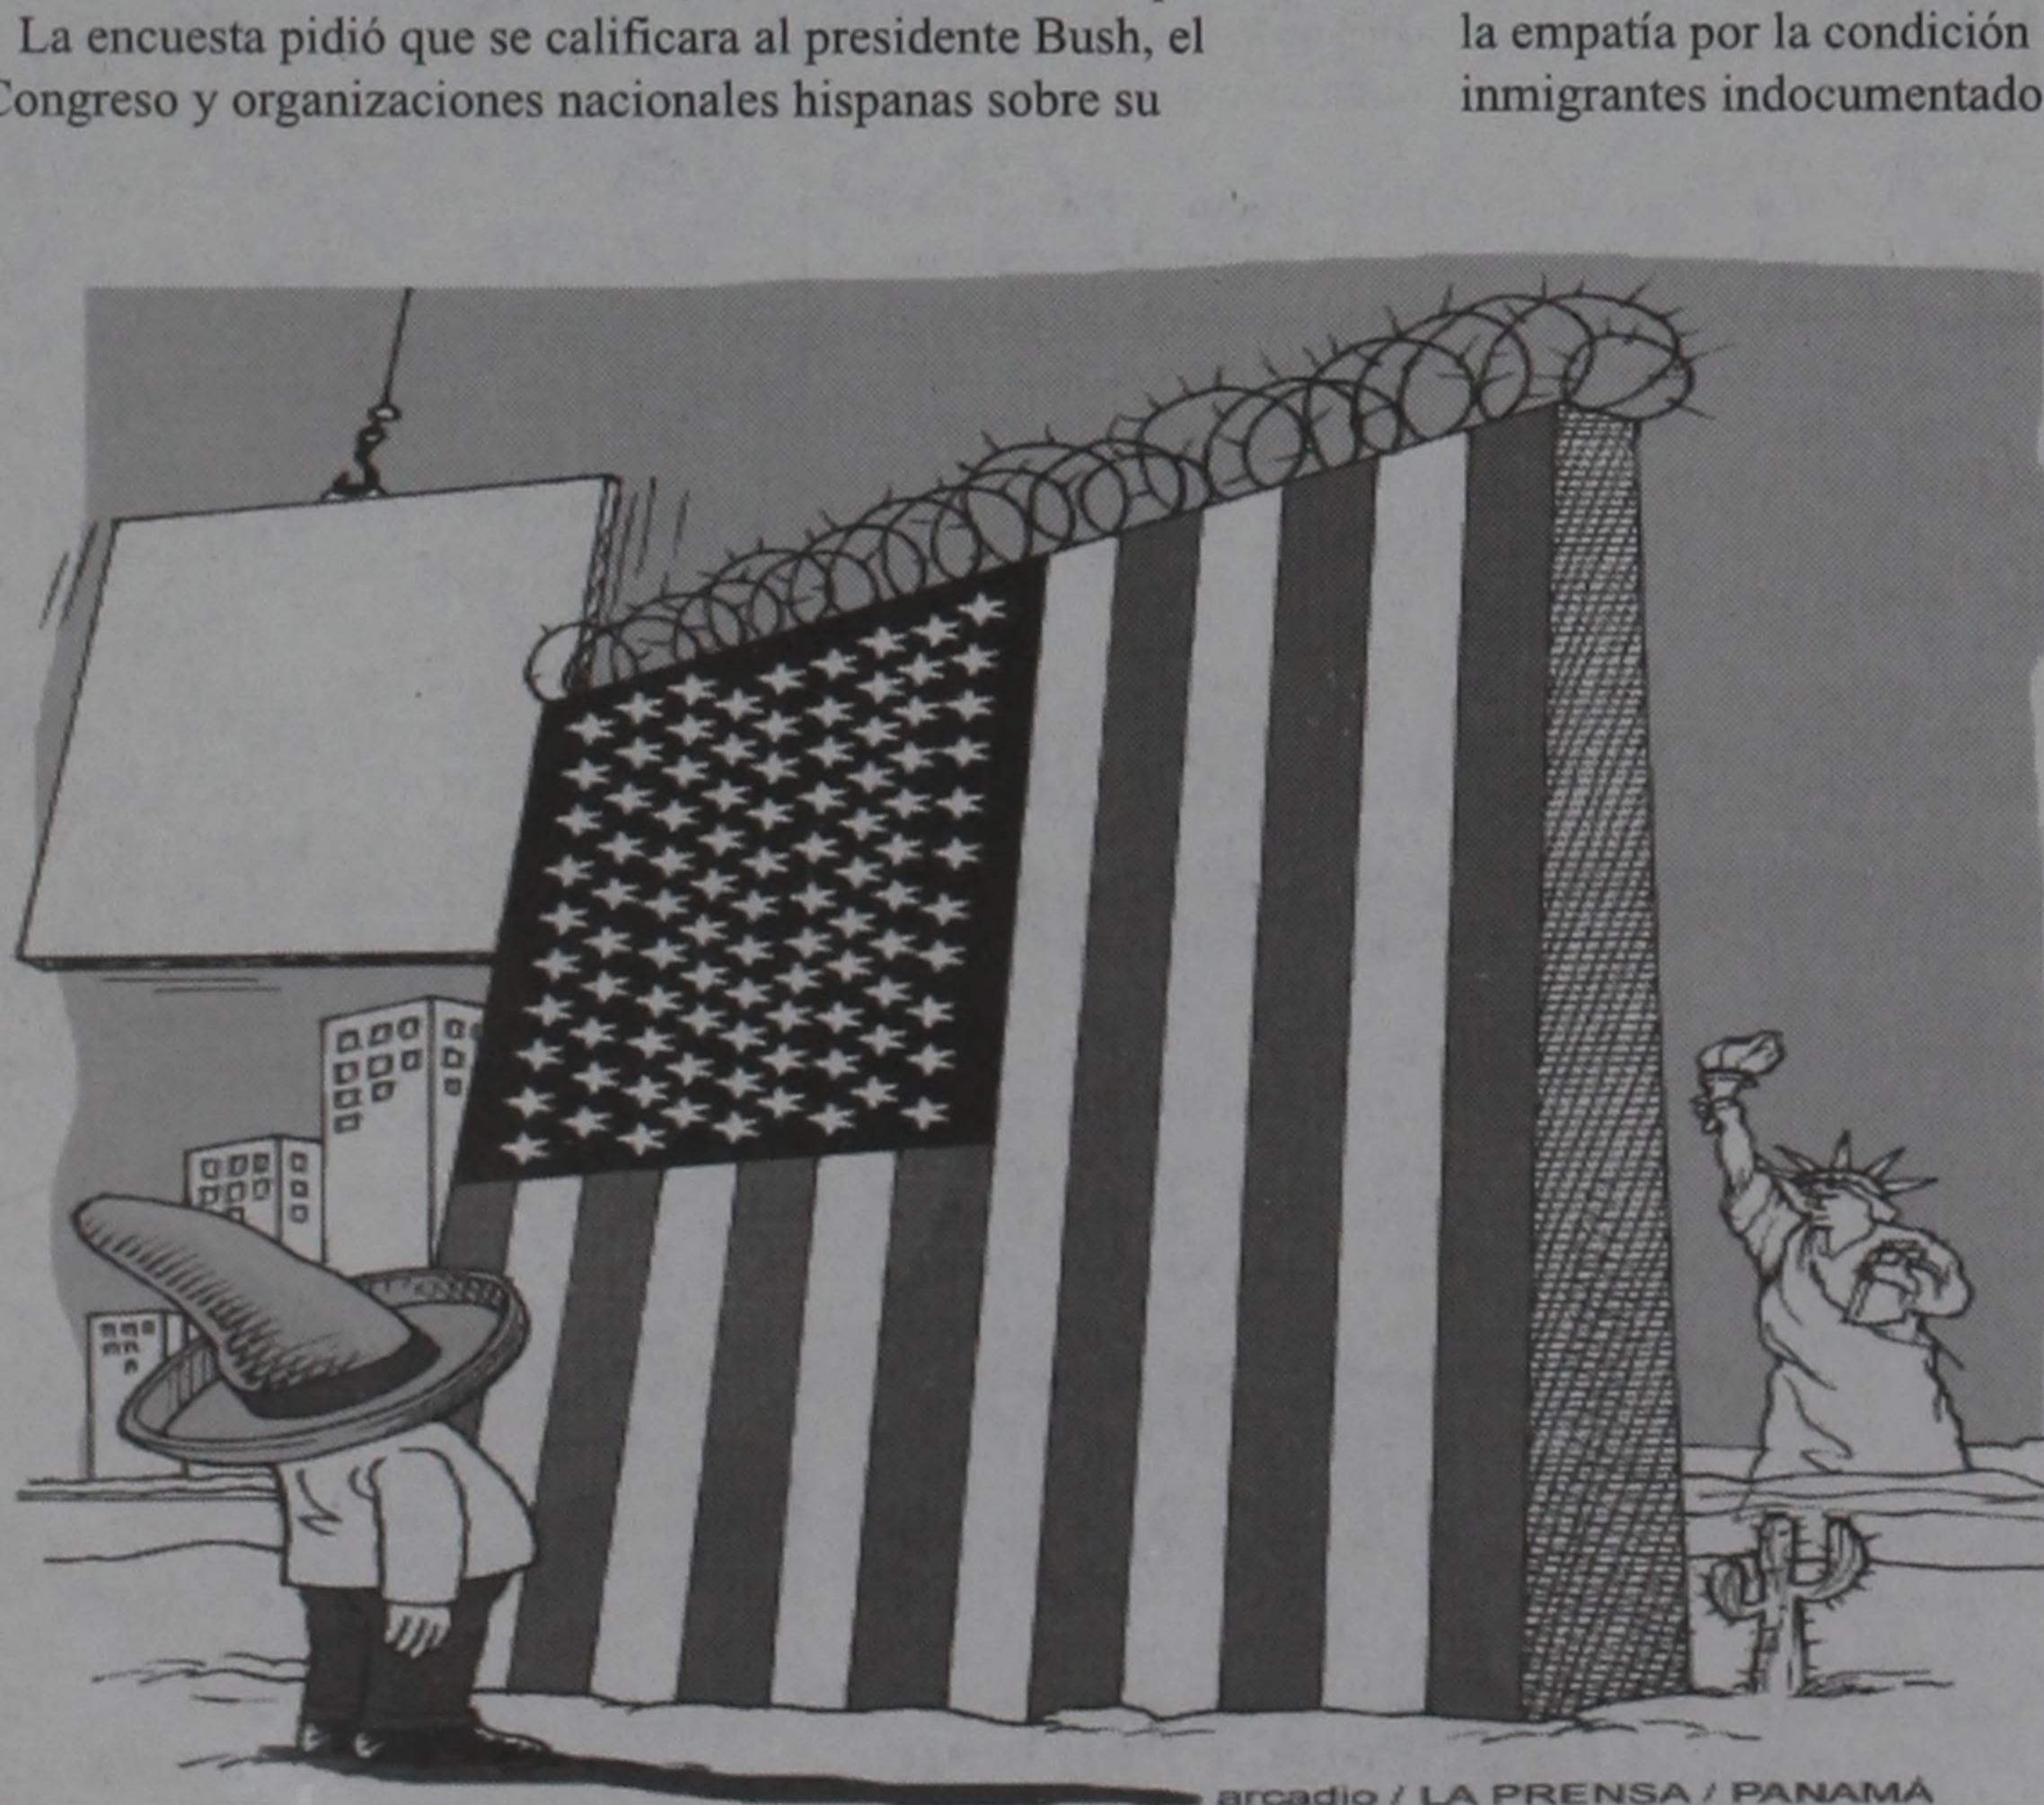

Before we all join Bob in a chorus of "Solidarity Forever," let's note that those 21 highly-paid executives are still in line for those bonuses, and — oh, Bob forgot to mention that he is sitting on a $3 million signing bonus he got when he joined Delphi six months ago.

This is Jim Hightower saying... As one worker put it after seeing the whole Delphi mess and Miller's film flam: "You feel like throwing up."

The Hispanic Tradition of the Three Kings Day

The Hispanic Tradition of celebrating the Three King's Day or El Dia De Los Tres Magos actually holds its roots in Catholic Traditions. In the Catholic Tradition, the 6th of January is set aside to celebrate the coming of the three magi to offer gifts to the newly born king. According to the bible, the three kings set off following a star that foretold of the birth of the king of the world.

In ancient times there were many who studied the stars to tell of future events. They were known as astrologers and were highly regarded for their skills. When the stars foretold of the birth of a great king there was a set of kings who set off to offer gifts to the king. These Kings came to King Herod and told him that they were going to honor the newly born king. As the record goes, the King Herod was very jealous and wished to destroy the Jesus. King Herod told the Magi to go and find the baby Jesus and to return to him and let him know where he might also go and pay tribute to the King.

The Magi continued on their journey. After they departed, King Herod plotted to find out where the baby Jesus was so he might kill him.

When the magi came to where the child was, no age is stated; they laid before him Frankincense, myrrh and gold. When they had finished paying tribute to the newly born king, they departed. On their return journey an angel appeared to them and told them of King Herod's plot to kill Jesus and advised them to not go and see him again. Taking the advice of the angel, the magi turned away from Bethlehem and returned home. When King Herod found out, he was very mad and ordered all children under the age of two be put to death to ensure the death of Jesus there by protecting his reign. An angel then appeared to Joseph and Mary and told them to depart so that Jesus would be spared.

On January 5th, children prepare a box as if for the baby Jesus to lie in. Many of them line it with hay but you can surely use whatever you have, old rags or dry grass. The children then place the boxes under their beds. On January 6th, in the morning they wake up to find three presents in the box for them, or sometimes at the foot of the bed symbolic of the three gifts that were given to the baby Jesus by the Magi.

This Holiday is known to many other Catholics as the Epiphany and is celebrated with a special mass at church. In following with the faith of the Catholic Church, Hispanic Catholics go to mass and celebrate that day with a dinner prepared in celebration. In some Hispanic traditions, they also have that day a King Cake, which is a cake in which is hidden a plastic baby. The lucky one to get the baby Jesus is named the God Parent of the Statue from the Nativity until the following year. They are to prepare and outfit for the baby and to present the statue for baptism at the Catholic Church on the day of Los Calendarios. This is the last day of Christmas and the day in which all decorations are put away until the following Christmas season.

What is so very nice about celebrating the Christmas season is that you stay focused on what the season is really about. Celebrating the birth of Jesus as well as maintaining the purity that comes with

Continúan fuegos en Texas, Oklahoma y Nuevo México

Los bomberos enfrentaban ayer la amenaza de más vientos y un clima más caluroso mientras luchaban con los incendios que han destruido pequeños caseríos y han calcinado cientos de miles de hectáreas en Texas, Oklahoma y Nuevo México.

Desde el 27 de diciembre, las llamas han destruido más de 250 edificios.

La semana pasada se reportaron cuatro muertos en Texas y Oklahoma.

El lunes, las autoridades recorrieron casa por casa en busca de víctimas en pueblos calcinados de Texas, incluyendo Ringgold.

Un incendio durante el fin de semana destruyó la mayor parte de la comunidad ranchera y ganadera de un centenar de personas cerca de la frontera con Oklahoma.

Otras cincuenta casas y 16,000 hectáreas fueron consumidas por el fuego mientras el viento lo propagaba a 20 millas de Ringgold hasta Nocona.

Coylee Grimsley y sus dos hijos vieron cómo se consumía su casa horas después que la mujer cocinó una comida especial para celebrar el año nuevo.

"Estábamos disfrutando de la ocasión cuando llegaron las llamas", se lamentó. "Parecía que se terminaba el mundo".

Dos grandes incendios que seguían activos ayer abarcaban unas 20,000 hectáreas en zonas casi deshabitadas cerca de San Angelo, en el oeste de Texas, dijeron las autoridades locales.

Uno destruyó 15 edificios en el condado de Sterling, al norte de Entre los proyectos de ley está la reautorización de la Violence Against Women Reauthorization Act y la Trafficking Victims Protection Reauthorization Act.

El informe concuerda en que mayor flexibilidad en los requerimientos de demostración de dificultades en extremo, la expansión de la autorización de identificación oficial de víctimas, y la facilitación de requerimientos para la solicitud de asistencia por parte de las agencias del orden podrían resultar en un incremento de los números de las víctimas calificables.

Los dos incendios estaban contenidos en un 70 por ciento hacia el mediodía de ayer, aseguraron las autoridades.

Otro incendio que abarcaba 15,000 hectáreas cerca de los pequeños poblados de Carbón, Gorman y Desdemona había sido re-ducido el lunes por la noche a su mínima expresión, declaró Mark Pipkin, del departamento de bomberos de Eastland.

Todos los principales incendios de Oklahoma fueron declarados bajo control el lunes por la noche, aunque la última palabra estaba en dependencia de las condiciones climáticas.

Bush does not know Abramoff raised funds to be returned

US President George W. Bush will donate to charity money that was raised for his re-election campaign by a top lobbyist who has pleaded guilty to fraud charges, the White House said Wednesday.

White House spokesman Scott McClellan told reporters Bush did not know lobbyist Jack Abramoff, a Washington powerbroker who pleaded guilty Tuesday in a case that has Congress on edge.

In a plea deal in which he pleaded guilty to conspiracy, fraud and tax evasion, Abramoff, who is close to Bush's Republican majority, agreed to testify against former congressional associates.

"The president doesn't know him, he does not recall meeting him," McClellan said.

"It is possible that he could have met him at a holiday reception or some other widely attended event," he said, adding that Abramoff attended three Hanukkah receptions at the White House.

McClellan said that money raised by Abramoff for Bush's 2004 election victory would be donated to the American Heart Association.

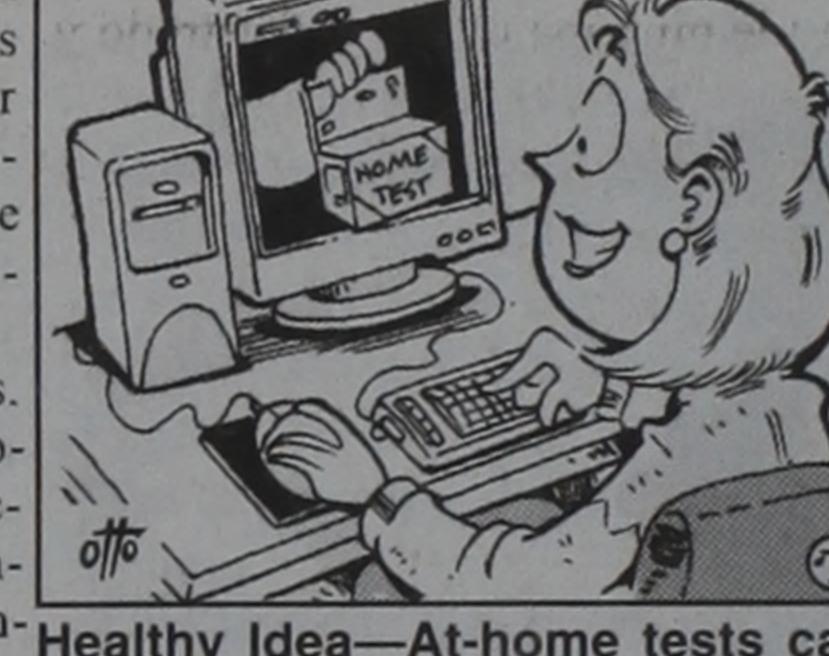

Democrats say the lobbyist, who is close to Bush's Republican Party, raised more than 100,000 dollars for Bush.

McClellan said he believed Abramoff raised "several thousands" of dollars for Bush's campaign.

Abramoff "needs to be held to account, punished for his wrongdoing, that he has acknowledged," the spokesman said.

In a statement of facts filed in court, Abramoff admitted bilking Indian tribes he was paid to represent out of millions of dollars.

He also said he obtained agreements from congressmen and staff to pass legislation in return for trips to storied Scottish golf links. Superbowl tickets and meals at his posh Washington restaurant.

Jay Hernández: galán de terror

Considerado como una de las jóvenes promesas de Hollywood, el actor mexicano Jay Hernández, quien no ha parado de trabajar desde su debut con la película Crazy Beautiful —donde compartió créditos con la actriz Kristen Duster— se encuentra promocionando Hostel, su primera cinta de horror.

"Fue una experiencia increíble, la pasé muy bien", dijo Hernández en inglés sobre esta película, durante una entrevista con El Diario La Prensa en una visita que realizó hace dos semanas a la Gran Manzana.

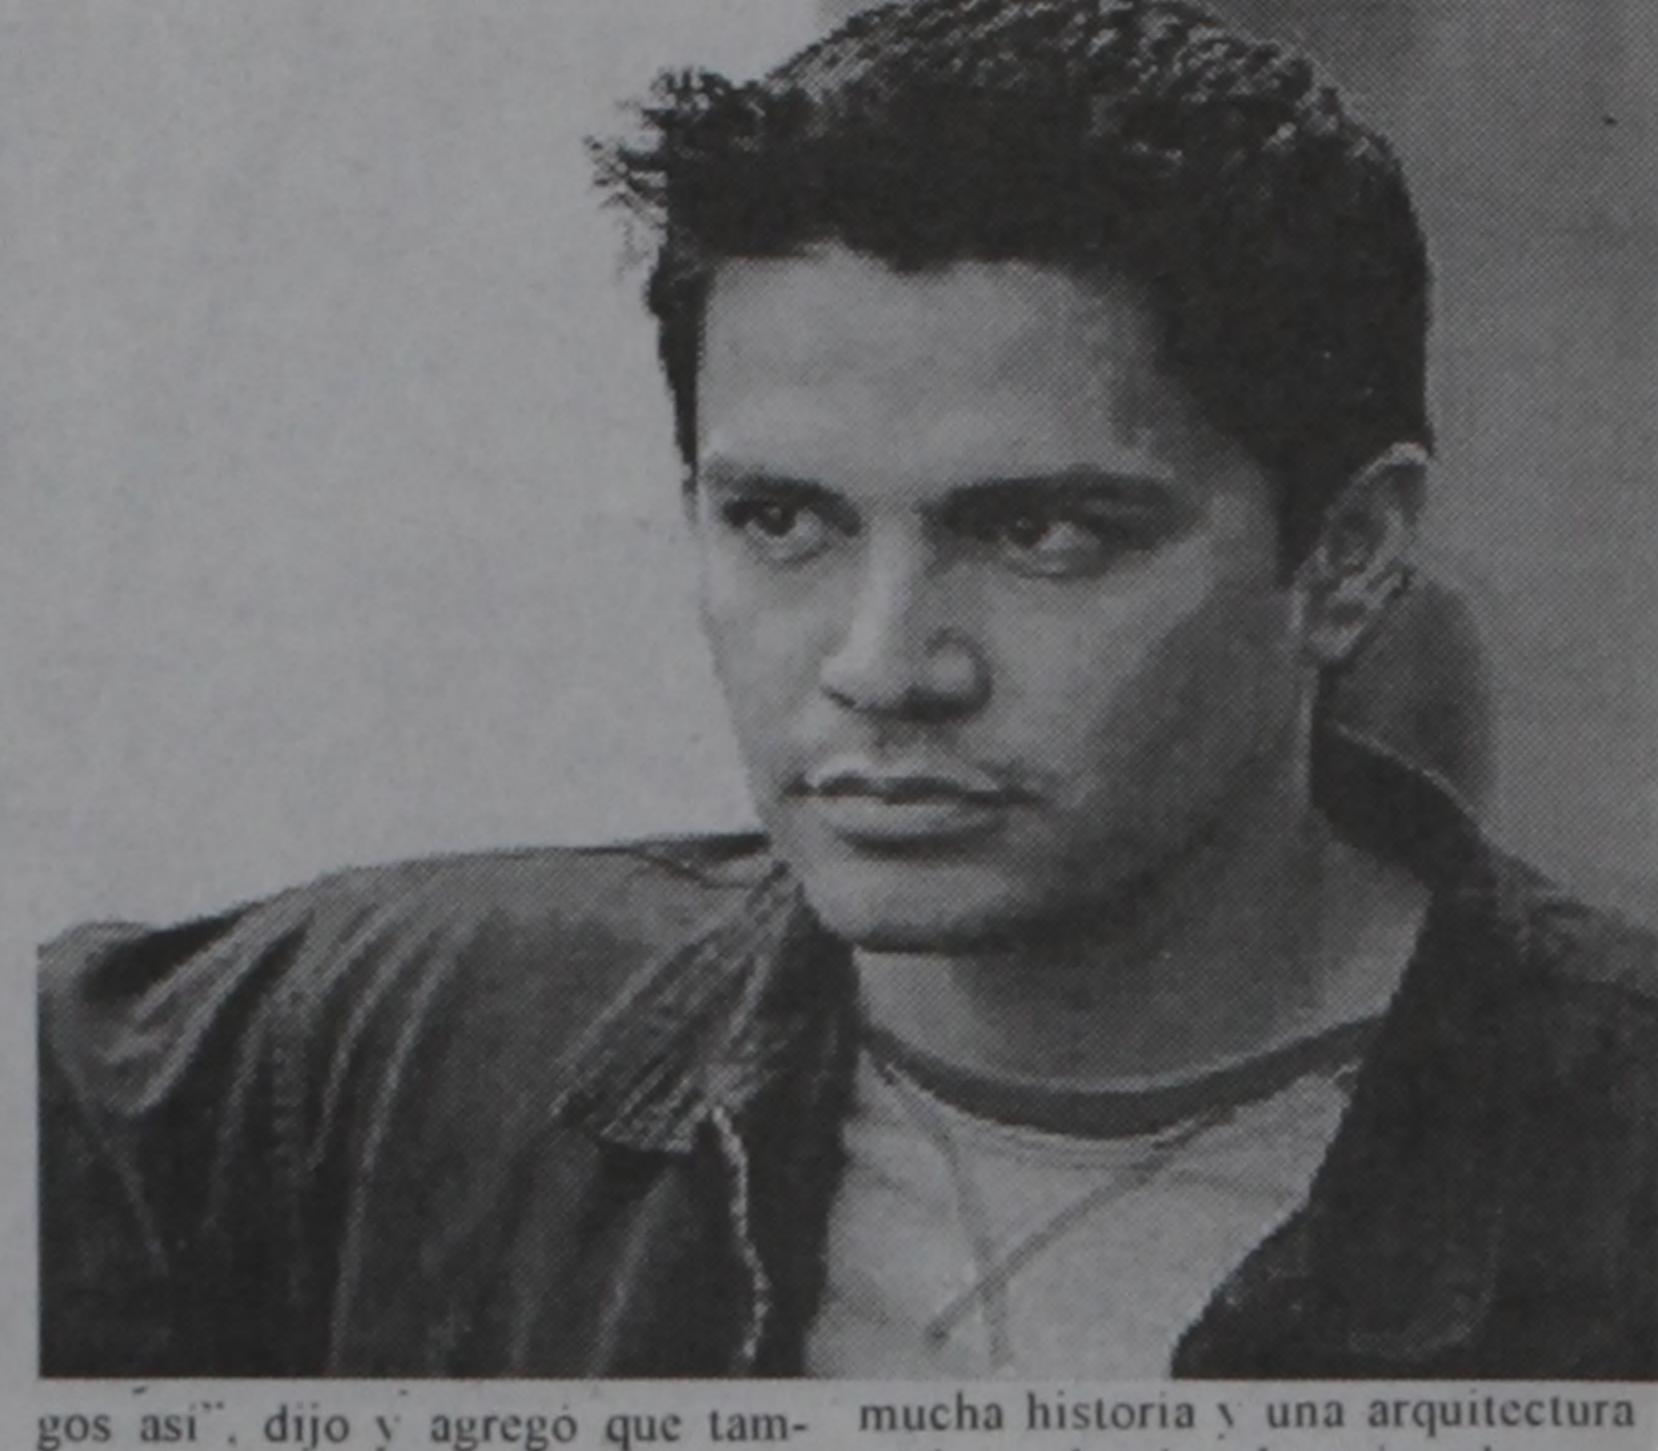

El actor quien fue descubierto en un elevador por un agente de talentos en Los Angeles, aseguró que los factores primordiales para involucrarse en este proyecto fueron el libreto, la dirección de Eli Roth, así como la fama del productor ejecutivo de la película, el famoso Quentin Tarantino.

"Cuando recibí el libreto estaba intrigado porque había recibido algunos otros de horror y no eran muy buenos. Pero cuando lei éste supe que no era como aquellos, así que llamé a mi representante. Realmente respondí al libreto y después conocí a Eli, quien me pareció que tenía mucha energía; además sabía que Quentin estaba involucrado, por lo que pensé que sería bastante cool formar parte de este proyecto".

Hostel —que se estrena nacionalmente el viernes— narra las aventuras de tres chicos que se encuentran viajando a mochila en Europa, sin saber que se toparan con una organización de crimen y tortura.

De aspecto atlético y vistiendo jeans y un blazer gris, Hernández aseguró que su personaje Paxton es un estudiante divertido, a veces cinico, y que no tuvo problemas para interpretarlo.

"La parte fiestera de mi personaje fue fácil porque tengo amigas gos así", dijo y agregó que también hubo unas escenas muy difíciles, especialmente las más violentas.

El rodaje duró 40 días y se realizó en su mayoría en la ciudad de Praga, República Checa, pero aún así la producción se trasladó de locación cerca de 30 veces al exótico pueblo del siglo XVI Czesky Krumlov, que pasa en el filme como un pueblo eslovaco. Fue aquí que se rodaron algunas escenas de tortura en el sótano de un hospital psiquiátrico que ya no funciona como tal y que fue construido en 1915.

"Fue una filmación bastante corta, por lo que a veces fue como un reto. Pero bastante divertido y con buena energía", dijo.

Sobre la experiencia de rodar en ese país de Europa del Este, el actor de 27 años de edad aseguró que la pasó muy bien y que espera regresar pronto.

"Praga es una ciudad hermosa. En Czesky Krumlov, el pueblo donde también filmamos es muy europeo, bastante antiguo con mucho historia y una arquitectura gótica; además, el equipo de producción allá, fue increíble".

Si bien Hostel es su primera película de terror, el chico nacido en Montebello, dijo no tener ningún filme favorito en este género.

"Las que realmente me asustaron fueron The Exorcist, The Shining, Halloween y A Nightmare on Elm Street, afirmó mientras degustaba su almuerzo en hotel del Midtown en Manhattan.

Aunque la película obtuvo una clasificación R por su alto contenido violento, Hernández invitó a sus padres a que asistieran a verla, obteniendo comentarios mixtos por parte de ellos.

"A mí mamá le gustó, aunque me dijo que se tapó los ojos en unas escenas y me dijo: 'Estuve increíble'. Por otra parte mi padre, quien es un poco conservador, me dijo que le pareció extraña".

Actualmente, Hernández se encuentra filmando bajo las órdenes del director Oliver Stone una cinta sobre los hechos trágicos de las Torres Gemelas que ocurrieron en el 11 de septiembre del 2001.

He stated that by the end of the month, a decision on who will be the actress to play Selena will be taken. However, Gonzales said the everything points to Alessandra, since she has all the characteristics.

The play is a script that Abraham Quintanilla, Selena's father, approved, and it is expected to be ready for half this year. Also, Gonzalez stated that he expects for the "Tex Mex queen" family to be there.

He added that the names of the rest of the cast remains under locked doors because the casting is not over yet.

On the other hand, he stated that the Timbiriche musical is going slower, because they need a good script, although they are already working in the story that could be ready in two years.

He stated that it will not be the band's story, but they will recall some of the moments they lived during their best times, in the 80s, through the songs.

"It's not about the story of the band, but about the context it was developed in, for the people to see beyond," Gonzalez is currently working in Nacho Cano's musical "Hoy no me puedo levantar."

Nueva York la mañana del 11 de septiembre del 2001.

En esta película, que aún carece de título y que se filma en las afueras de Los Angeles, se centra en la historia de John McLaughlin y Will Jimeno, quienes serán interpretados por Nicolas Cage y Michael Peña. Ellos fueron los dos últimos agentes de la Autoridad de Puertos de Nueva York y New Jersey en ser rescatados de los escombros. Hernández personifica al mejor amigo de Peña, por lo que tuvo que hablar con varios agentes de la nombrada institución para conocer sus historias.

Sobre esa fatídica mañana, el actor recordó que estaba en Los Angeles cuando recibió una llamada telefónica y prendió el televisor. "Era horrible", aseguró.

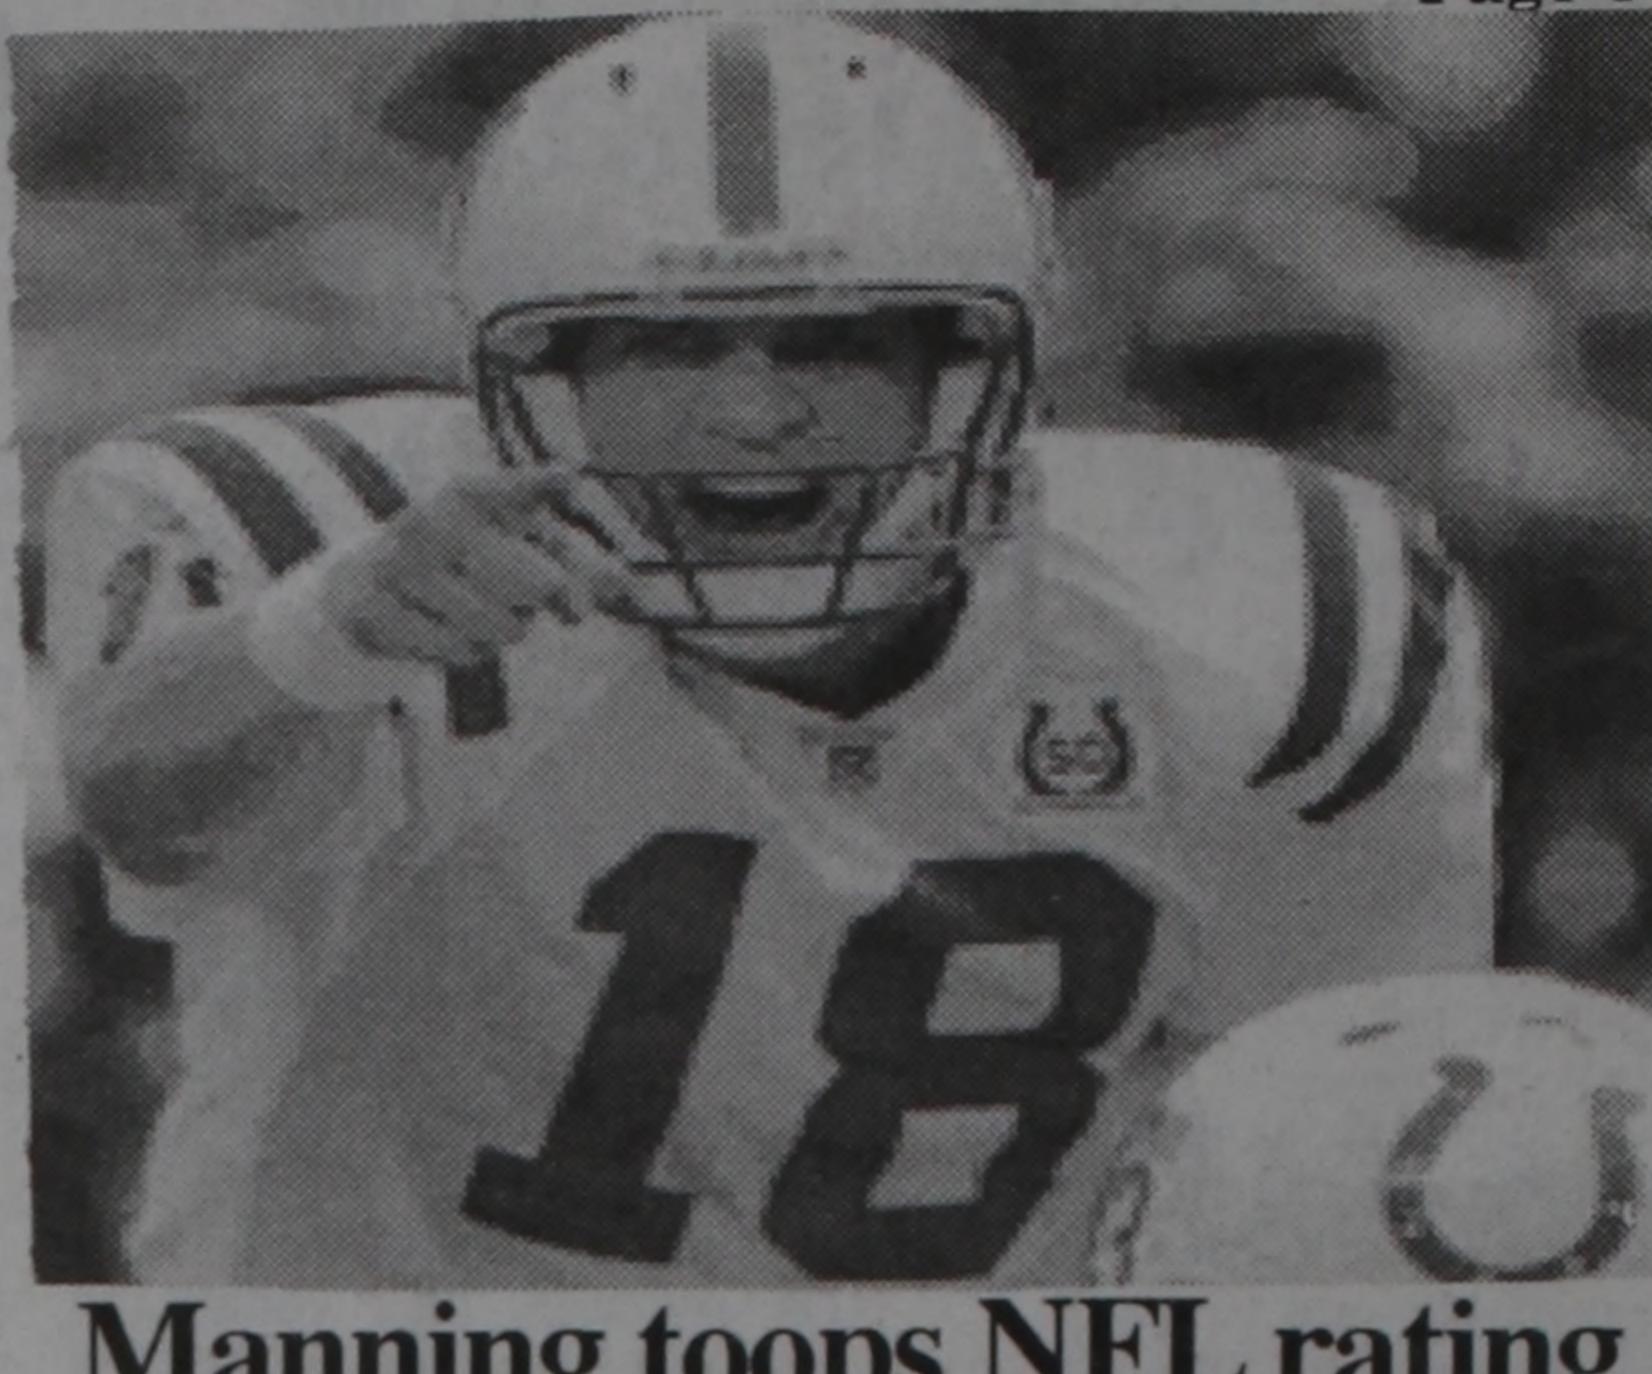

En cuanto al joven que él interpreta y quien desafortunadamente murió ese día, prefirió no tocar el tema con sus seres queridos.

"No hablé con su familia [la del personaje] porque no quería invadir su privacidad, fue hecho muy doloroso", dijo.

En este nuevo proyecto el galán de Hostel también comparte créditos con Maria Bello y Maggie Gyllenhaal, y se espera que llegue al cine la segunda semana de agosto. Acerca de su trabajo con Peña, quien participó en la cinta Crash con la que recibió buenas críticas, dijo que es un hombre muy talentoso.

"Él es fenomenal, estaba emocionado de conocerlo y me da gusto que haya dos actores latinos en esta película. Estoy muy feliz de que le esté yendo bastante bien".

Ante la pregunta de con cuál actriz latina le gustaría trabajar, Jay dudó un poco en responder. "Si te digo, mi novia se enoja", confesó. "Pero me gustaría trabajar con Salma Hayek, es bellísima. La conocí en una fiesta", dijo el joven actor.

Manning toops NFL rating numbers in 2005 season

The Indianapolis Colts quarterback, Peyton Manning, wrapped up the 2005 NFL regular season on top of the best passers rating with an average of 104.1 points in 17 weeks of activity.

The oldest of the Mannings picked up by the end of the season and after being overshadowed by Ben Roethlisberger at first and then by Carson Palmer, during the second half of the campaign, he took the lead of the rating numbers since week 13 and never looked down.

The quarterback of the Colts has monopolized the ratings for the last five weeks and wrapped up the regular season of the National Football League as best passer with 104.1 units.

During 16 games played, Manning completed 305 passes in 453 attempts with three thousand and 747 yards, that is 8.2 yards per throw, and 67.3% of effectiveness.

He also threw the ball 28 times to the touchdown area and was only intercepted 10 times.

Right behind the University of Tennessee graduate was the Cincinnati Bengals' Palmer with 101.1 points in the effectiveness rating. The third place went to Roethlisberger (Pittsburgh Steelers) despite his injuries, with 98.6 units.

The fourth place, and first one of the National Conference, was for the Seattle Seahawks quarterback, Matt Hasselbeck, with an average of 98.2. The fifth place went to Marc Bulger (St. Louis Rams) with 94.4 points.

There were no surprises either in the runner spot after Shain Alexander (Seattle) dominated easily from beginning to end and finished with 880 yards in 370 drags, 27 out of them for touchdowns. Meanwhile, the best runner of the American Conference was Larry Johnson (Kansas City) with 1,750 yards in 336 runs.

Defensively, the Tampa Bay Buccaneers only tolerated 277.8 yards and 17.1 points per match, allowing only 28 touchdowns and 26 goals. They also allowed the rivals to hold the ball an average of only 29:15 minutes per game.

Top Boxer

The World Boxing Council chose super lightweight champion Floyd Mayweather as its boxer of the year on Tuesday, one of several annual awards announced by the WBC.

Mayweather won the super lightweight title in January 2005 with an eighth-round TKO of Henry Bruseles, adding to his super featherweight and lightweight titles he won earlier in the decade. He also won his debut bout in the welterweight division in 2005, a sixth-round TKO of Sharma Mitchell in November.

Another U.S. boxer, Jermain Taylor, received honorable mention as the best boxer.

The council declared the May 7 lightweight bout won by American Diego Corrales over Mexico's Jose Luis Castillo on a 10th round TKO as its "best fight of the year".

The most dramatic fight of the year was judged to be the March decision in which Mexico's Erik Morales beat Philippine Manny Pacquiao.

Mexican Marco Antonio Barrera was awarded the knockout of the year for his right to the head of South Africa's Mzonke Fana in the second round of their April bout.

The honors will be formally presented at an awards ceremony Jan. 28-31 in the Caribbean coast resort of Cancún.

Democratic Candidate Filings

By Abel Cruz

Monday the 4th marked the last day candidates could file to toss their names in the ring for the March Democratic Primary.

According to Lubbock County Democratic Chair, Johnnie Jones:

"The Texas Democratic Party has introduced a full slate of statewide candidates including Governor, Lt. Governor, Attorney General, Comptroller, Land Commissioner, Railroad Commissioner, Texas Supreme Court, and Court of Criminal appeals"

Out of 32 congressional races being contested in the state, only one candidate will run unopposed by a Democrat. Mike Conaway, R-Midland, drew no Democratic opposition.

In Lubbock County, a slate of candidates has emerged to run for precinct chair and Ms. Jones also filed as the only candidate for Democratic Party County Chair.

Democrats filing in local races are:

Robert Ricketts - U.S. House District 19 (Currently held by Rep. Randy Neugebauer)

Susan Barrick - Lubbock County Judge

Justin Martin - Lubbock County Commissioner, Precinct 2

Judge Aurora Hernandez - Lubbock County JP - Precinct 3

John Miller - State Representative - District 83 (Currently held by Delwin Jones)

Pearlie Mayfield - State Representative - District 84 (Currently held by Carl Isett)

But it is the race for the state house which will likely produce more fireworks than those seen on the fourth of July, between Republican Governor Rick Perry, and Texas State Comptroller and Independent candidate Carol Keeton Strayhorn. Author and musician Kinky Friedman has also thrown his signature hat into the ring and will also run as an independent. Although Strayhorn is currently a Republican, she recently announced she will run as an independent.

It wasn't that long ago that Perry and Strayhorn were Democrats, with Perry switching parties some 12 years ago, and Strayhorn following suit. Strayhorn's switch to run as an independent will surely be a sore point brought up again and again by the Perry campaign.

On the other side of the aisle, Democrats will be enjoying the splintering race between Perry and Strayhorn, hoping that the outcome will drive people to the Democratic side. Former Congressman and Texas State Supreme Court Justice Bob Gammie is being joined in the Democratic primary by former U.S. Representative Chris Bell, and Rashad Jaser.

Democrat Felix Alvarado, current middle school assistant principal also filed and is the only Hispanic candidate running in the governors' race.

CITY WATCH

The City of Lubbock Health Department and Lubbock Animal Services will host a public hearing to discuss the proposed animal ordinance. The last major comprehensive change to the entire Animal Ordinance occurred in 1991.

Both the Lubbock Board of Health and the Animal Shelter Advisory Committee have been working on the proposed ordinance for over 1 year. The Animal Shelter Advisory Committee approved the current draft on October 18, 2005 followed by the Board of Health approval on November 11, 2005. The public hearing will allow the opportunity for additional public comment before taking to the City Council for consideration and approval in February 2006.

Dr. Larry Farley, Chair of the Animal Shelter Advisory Committee and Dr. John Selby, Chair of the Lubbock Board of Health will call the meeting to order and introduce any members of their respective Boards. This will be followed by a short PowerPoint presentation and overview of the proposed animal ordinance by Tommy Camden, Health Director and Fred Sanderson, Animal Services Manager. A citizen comment period will follow for those wishing to address the proposed ordinance. Citizens wishing to speak are requested to sign in at the time of the hearing between 6:30 p.m. and 7:00 p.m. and will have 3 minutes to address any concerns. Public comment will begin at approximately 7:00 p.m.

The ordinance is intended to protect the citizens, protect the animals, promote responsible pet ownership, and improve the quality of life for Lubbock citizens. The 29-page ordinance is organized into 7 main sections relating to general issues, rabies and zoonosis control, animal population control funding, animal establishments, other animals, fees, and severance and repealer issues. Highlights of the proposed ordinance provide more enforcement power for continuing public nuisances, establishes a special fund to address costs associated with medical care services such as spaying/neutering and micro chipping, allows for feral cat management programs, restricts tethering of an animal in an area unless properly fenced, allows no more than 4 adult dogs or 4 adult cats unless a multi-pet permit is obtained, and requires identification/registration tags or micro chipping on all cats and dogs over 4 months of age.

This ordinance is not a cat-leash ordinance but will require owners of cats allowing their animals to wander off their own private property to be properly registered, spayed or neutered, and vaccinated.

A copy of the draft ordinance can be found on the city website at: <http://healthdept.ci.lubbock.tx.us>. Comments can also be directed by email to Tommy Camden at teamden@mylubbock.us.

Immigration

"Nobody is going to be going to churches locking people up," he said. "If they are facilitating immigrants coming into the country illegally, that's another thing."

But critics said the language of the bill is so broad it could affect thousands of church workers, private agency employees and even everyday citizens who assist undocumented immigrants. Workers who teach English classes, operate day laborer hiring centers or offer water to immigrants stumbling across the border clearly could be affected, said Michele Waslin of the National Council of La Raza, a Hispanic advocacy organization in Washington.

Violations "could involve taking your undocumented nanny to the store, to the doctor's appointment," Waslin added. The bill mentions penalties of up to 5 years to 20 years in prison, depending on whether the activity is for profit.

Ira Mehlman of Federation for American Immigration Reform, a Washington-based group that wants stricter limits on immigration, said he doubts the bill would lead to the prosecution of people who offer undocumented immigrants food, water or other essentials, but that those who provide services could be targeted.

King, who is chairman of the homeland security committee, called the wide-ranging bill a "measured law" and said it grew out of widespread outrage over illegal immigration and fear of terrorism. "The terrorist acts of Sept. 11 made it clear that our nation must be more aggressive in preventing terrorists from entering the United States," he said.

Immigrant advocates said they agree the borders should be controlled, but that King's enforcement-only approach won't work. They contend illegal immigration is at record levels because the "broken" immigration system offers only 5,000 visas a year for full-time service workers when the annual flow of such workers is estimated at 500,000.

King said he agrees a legal channel must be created -- President George W. Bush has proposed a guest worker program -- but that first the borders must be brought under control.

The prospects for the bill as it reaches the U.S. Senate is unclear.

With the Senate expected to consider three competing bills designed to tackle immigration reform and border security early next year, it is uncertain which provisions of legislation approved by the House of Representatives earlier this month will actually make it into law.

Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist (R-Tenn.) has said the Senate will take up immigration legislation in February.

As for the provision criminalizing assistance to undocumented immigrants, church worker Chacon, who herself fled death squads during El Salvador's 1980-92 civil war, said if the bill becomes law, she's prepared to go to jail.

"If you know this is a mother with four kids who don't have food, are you going to say no because they don't have documents?" said Chacon, an outreach worker at St. Brigid's parish in Westbury.

Patrick Young, head of the Long Island Immigrant Alliance, predicted that if the bill becomes law, "you'll see Quakers and Catholics going to jail essentially for their religious beliefs."
